The IMPROPER

In the Shallows

There are few subjects that drive me to sanctimony. Trickle-down economics. Nick Altschuller. Certain Greek myths. I used to take a sort of prissy umbrage at the story of the judgment of Paris. Why, after all, would the prince pick Aphrodite, a deity whose biggest legacy is the etymological root of the term "venereal disease," over the more bankable charms of Hera, who offered him power, and Athena, who offered him martial glory? The boy must have had the brains of a limpet. After all, the bedrock of Western literature, The Iliad, is a roughly 15,000-line explanation of why, exactly, this was a terrible idea.

And yet. There's a lot to be said for the worship of superficial, physical beauty. The Greeks, more than anyone, recognized the sublimity of an ideal human form—had they ever encountered Christina Hendricks, the Venus de Milo would've required a lot more marble. We're material beings composed of a handful of common elements, and when those elements are proportioned in a happy way, the world seems a little less mired in squalor. Rather than denounce the cult of the sculpted buttock, remember that beauty is truth, and truth beauty. Which means that Botox isn't cheating. Besides, inner beauty sounds icky, like complimenting someone on their ventricles.

Our cover girls, the Bielkus sisters, combine this issue's two themes of health and beauty at Health Yoga Life, their new studio on Beacon Hill.

Slice Cream

At Japonaise Bakery, owner Hiroko Sakan's bread will have you reevaluating your sandwich strategy. Shoku pan has more fat and gluten than your average white bread since it's enriched with milk (or, even better, heavy cream). Loaves are rich, springy, moist and as feathery as cotton candy. Toasted and buttered, griddled with cheese or munched straight out of the bag, it might just be the greatest thing since—well, you know.

Impersonals CALLED OUT

TO THE WOMAN IN BELMONT MEDICAL'S RECEPTION AREA ON DEC. 5: I just wanted to thank you again for spreading some holiday cheer. Though I did see the "No Cell Phone Usage" signs, I assumed that this meant no disruptive dialogue. I was checking e-mail and listening to voicemails. My phone accidentally went on to speaker, maybe for one-tenth of a second. I quickly shut it off, and apologized to everyone in the room.

Without a second thought, you proceeded to make snide remarks to the woman next to you about how I felt I was special and in a tone loud enough for everyone to hear. I reminded you that I was sorry. You made a quip about how the airwaves can disrupt medical equipment. I felt compelled to ask the front desk. She assured me it was completely fine.

This was a hospital waiting room. How do you even know what kind of battle I'm fighting? You were the rudest, most unattractive person I've ever met. May you never cross my path again. Sent from my iPhone

A Message of Thanks:

On a December afternoon at the Starbucks at the corner of Beacon and Charles streets, a mentally unstable person sitting across the room began to unravel and started saying frightening things to me under his breath. He threw furniture across the floor and stormed out. As soon as he left, I burst into tears and you came over to see if I was OK. You stayed with me until I stopped shaking. Your sweetness helped defuse the tension. Thank you.

First Taste

THE JOURNEY BACK

Over the past year, word that the folks behind Union Square's fanciful Journeyman were opening an adjoining bar made its way around the Web. But for months the news seemed like a whole lot of nothing. And that's kind of the idea. Delayed by the usual bugbears of planning and permits, Backbar quietly opened in mid-December. Now actually finding the 35-seat space is half the fun.

"I liked the idea of confusing people a little bit," says bar manager Sam Treadway. "You can feel the energy coming from back here, so it pulls you in." Recruited by owners Meg Grady Troia, Tse Wei Lim and Diana Kudajarova to front the space, Treadway trained at landmarks like Eastern Standard and Drink before spending the past year in Hawaii. "This is the bar I've always wanted," he says. "Hawaii is beautiful, but with this, it took very little to convince me to return."

"I LIKED THE IDEA OF CONFUSING PEOPLE A LITTLE BIT."

Tucked down a corridor and with little in the way of signage, Backbar shares Journeyman's industrial aesthetic, mixing minimalist touches like a tempered steel bar and tables made from repurposed beams. A stripe of poured concrete dissects the floor and covers an oil trough from when the space was a Ford dealership in the 1920s. A lighting installation created by bike builder Josh Kampa of the neighboring Arc-En-Ciel zigzags overhead.

This austere environment belies the excitement behind the bar, where a staff exclusively consisting of bartenders ensures there's a wealth of knowledge on hand. "We love shopping locally and seasonally, so our menu, and what we stock, is going to change pretty frequently," Treadway says. His favorite creations include the Union Mule ($11), which swaps the Moscow Mule's vodka for pear-infused gin, and the Model-T ($11), an auto-inspired sipper mixing Jim Beam Black and Chartreuse. Bites from Kudajarova and Lim include pork cracklings ($4), caramel corn ($3) and oyster shooters ($3 each), but are also available in a more decadent (and decadently priced) chef's sampler ($15 per person).

"I think people are taking their cocktails more seriously," Treadway adds. "As people try more things, they're getting more adventurous." To this end, the menu is divided into four sections: Classic Cocktails, Modern Inspirations, Current Choices and, appropriately, Tradesman. "People are surprised to see that those who actually work in a bar crave drinks like a shot and a beer. Sometimes it's just what you need." KYLE WRIGHT

WOODWARD CHUCKED?

And wave so long to the Palm

IS THE WOODWARD checking out of the Ames Hotel? Sure looks like it. CBRE/Grossman Retail Advisors is advertising a lease for a fully built-out restaurant on three levels with a patio, and a 2 am liquor license at One Court Street, and the ad's photos feature the Woodward's several dining areas. But nobody's talking.

"I'm not allowed to speak with the press," said the hostess who answered the phone. "No, they're not closing," said publicist Joanna Roffo, dismissing the news as "just a rumor." The hotel's owner, Morgans Hotel Group, issued a less definitive denial: "We periodically explore ways to enhance our F&B [food and beverage] experience but no decisions have been made for this property." Asked when the space would become available for lease, an executive at the real estate company declined to comment. Could this be the end of executive chef Mark Goldberg's unforgettable short-rib tortellini with truffle butter? Stay tuned.

THE PALM HAS SHUTTERED its caricature-laden dining rooms, but will return at a time and venue yet to be determined. According to general manager Nathan Watters, "We're moving locations, it just won't be as seamless as we were hoping." Having wrapped up a 15-year lease, the Palm's owners are scouting space in the Financial District and Back Bay, and hope to unveil a new Palm late in 2012.

CAMBRIDGE CLASSIC UpStairs on the Square is launching a pizza and panini bar in its Monday Club this month. Showcasing small plates created by chef Susan Regis, the menu will range from lamb panini on focaccia and fresh sardines with fishbone vinaigrette to "exuberant" pizzas topped with potato and caviar or lobster.

For the Ages

Out of MIT's Langer Lab comes the end of one-size-fits-all skincare. Armed with data about how the moisture, elasticity and thickness of skin changes through the aging cycle, scientist Jasmina Aganovic found that the market was high on clutter and low on customization. Filling the niche with separate lines for women in their 20s (Radiance), 30s (Harmony), 40s (Elegance) and 50s (Grace), Stages of Beauty addresses specific skincare needs with cleansers, scrubs, serums, treatment creams and supplements. Start with the three-piece anti-aging system, which provides all the tools necessary to pump, pipette and polish your way to younger-looking skin. LINDSEY CANANT

Q&A

Drama King

Christopher Hampton is an Academy Award–winning playwright and screenwriter. The Huntington Theatre Company stages his translation of Yasmina Reza's God of Carnage Jan. 6–Feb. 5.

Why are you drawn to Reza's works?
I respond very well emotionally, and that's key. There's a lot more that goes into translating a play than just adjusting the words. You need to translate the emotions associated with them, and that varies from culture to culture.

Do you worry that you'll lose the heart of a play when you change the language?
We try to change as little as possible. When Yasmina and I were working on Art years ago, nothing really changed because the play worked no matter where you took it. For God of Carnage, there were some adjustments needed.

Like changing the setting?
Yes. When we came to New York, we began translating it into American English, which is very different from English in the United Kingdom. We had cast James Gandolfini to star, and he was very worried that audiences wouldn't be able to accept him as anything but a New Yorker.

Have you seen Roman Polanski's film?
I have. Yasmina and Polanski had a very specific vision of what they wanted to do for the film, so they did their own adaptation, and I wasn't involved. To me, it's completely different. It's not what I would call witty.

What are you working on now?
I've been translating the musical version of Daphne du Maurier's Rebecca, which will be opening on Broadway in April.

Mouthing Off

Advances in cosmetic dentistry give just about everyone something to chew on.

"Have you ever thought of going a little whiter? And straighter?"

A fair enough question—albeit one that normally would've set homophobia and racism alarms ringing. As it happened, the person asking was my dentist. And unless he's a closet Rick Perry supporter, I'm pretty sure he was talking about my teeth.

"What would I have to do?" I asked, envisioning epic suffering and public discomfort. His answer: three months of wearing Invisalign (clear braces) on my bottom teeth, followed by veneers (porcelain facings) also on the bottom, finished off with an overall laser whitening. The result, he assured me, would be impeccable teeth.

Like a lot of dentists these days, mine overlaps his conventional work with a cosmetic practice. But quite unlike many, he surrounds himself with toys worthy of 007: lasers that reshape gums and teeth with minimal pain, inflammation and healing time; in-house DNA testing; microscopes for doing finely detailed tooth work. But what ultimately convinced me to take his proposed plunge was that he has the most perfect dentist name of all time: Dr. Spitz.

So I agreed, and for three months in my mid-30s I wore clear, removable braces with all the grace and dignity of an eighth grader. When it came time to fit the veneers, I got to know those lasers up-close and personal. I also got a glimpse of just how a dental expert overlaps with a beauty expert. "I need to know everything a patient likes and doesn't like about their teeth, so I can plan the best combination of fixes for them," says Dr. Spitz. "If they don't like the way their gums frame their teeth, we can reshape. If they have a chip or crack, we can look at veneers or crowns. If the color is slightly off, we can change it."

When the time came to whiten my choppers, I was introduced to one of Dr. Spitz's handiest gadgets yet: video goggles that he hands over just before the lasers fire. "Watching a movie helps patients relax," he explains. "It takes their mind off the work that's going on." For my own part, I rejoiced in watching Good Will Hunting while I waited for the process to finish, knowing everything had, indeed, been straightened out.

SHORT TAKES

Misfits populate a funny and touching collection of stories.

STEVE ALMOND MANAGES TO combine cynical darkness with lyrical beauty in this book of short stories about mostly tortured oddballs. And, as always, he's extremely funny.

Layered with ironies both delicious and disturbing, there's the story of a bitter gambling man, the son of a suicide, whose analyst is, himself, a closet gambler. Their playing field is unbalanced when the two men meet by accident at a casino. There, the tensions of therapeutic hierarchy and doctor/patient relationships come to weird fruition over the card table.

"First Date Back" is about a soldier returning from war. On his trip home, he finds himself drawn to a flight attendant as his post-traumatic stress finds its way into the fluorescent impersonality of peacetime. Another tale is about a lonely old man who tends a fading cemetery and lives in a converted vault. Into this barren life comes a pregnant teenager who forces him out of his solitude, much against his will, and into the frightening crisis of a baby born in the land of death. These last two stories leave your heart feeling like a tuning fork that hums and resonates—and aches—for days. ✖✖✖

God Bless America

"We've discussed payment at length. That discussion is now over. You either pay your outstanding fees or we terminate."

"Would you accept chips?" Sharpe reached into his pocket. "No? Ooooh, the silent treatment. I must be in trouble."

"You're not a child, Gary."

FULL MONTY

Montreal is a glutton's paradise.

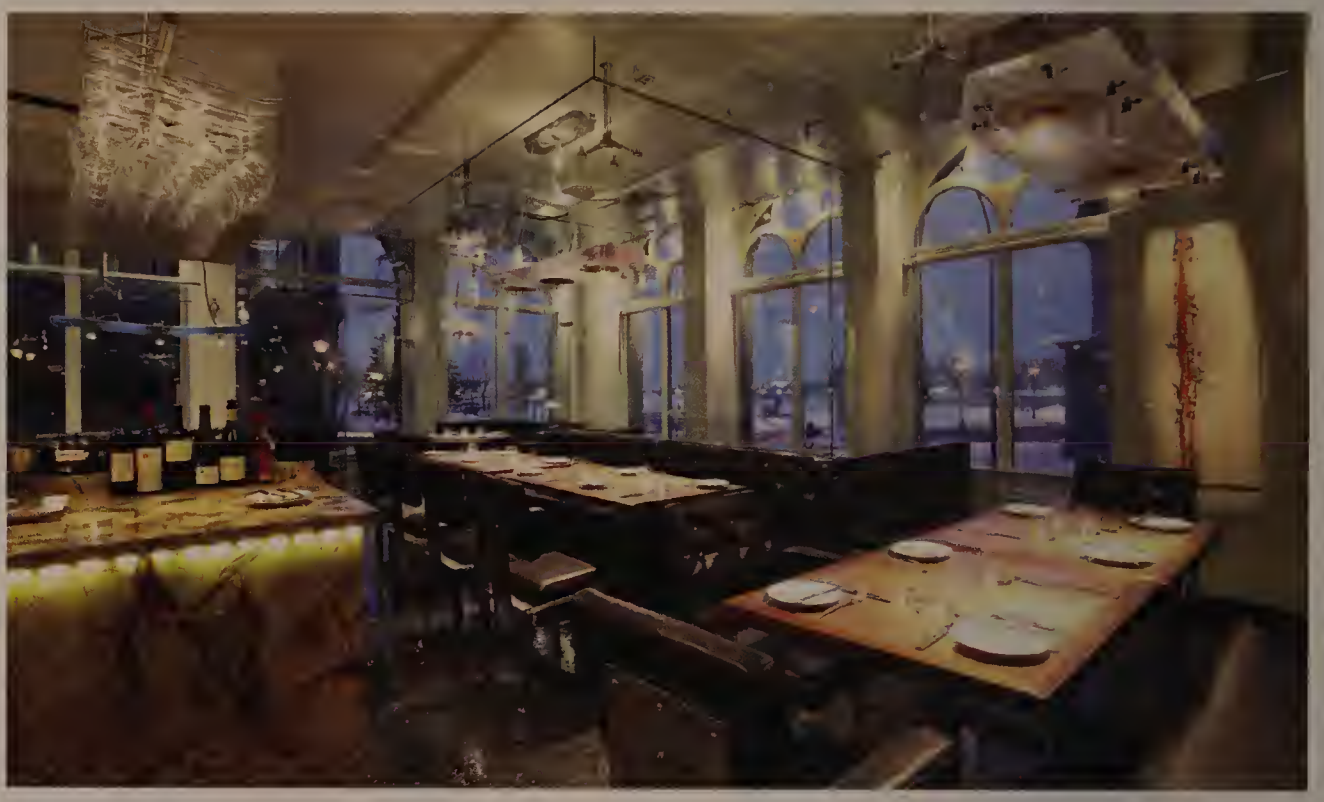

TABLE SERVICE Order the wine tasting menu at DNA for a lesson in Canadian varietals.

ONLY AN HOUR AWAY BY direct flight or five hours by car, Montreal is famous for being a culturally diverse city and having a strong sense of identity—people from some 85 ethnicities inhabit the 30-mile-long island. Judging by the prevalence of specialty food shops and restaurants, it's obvious they're all gourmands.

To begin a culinary tour of Montreal, base yourself somewhere central. The Hotel Gault in Old Montreal, for instance, is a minimalist oasis of brushed concrete and floating orchids. It's within walking distance from some of the city's best restaurants as well as the Victoria Square metro. Best, it doesn't serve dinner, so you'll be forced to explore. But you can start a day's binge with the Gault's breakfast, featuring house-made jam and warm, flaky croissants oozing with chocolate. There's also hot chocolate and cookies upon check-in (and check-out), which you can enjoy in the library, warmed by a two-sided fireplace and stacked with art books. Suites have heated floors and original mid-century-modern furnishings. If you book a room with a terrace (like Suite 540), you can take in the city's eclectic mix of 17th-century churches sitting forbearingly next to Brutalist and Art Deco edifices.

Like a Chowhound board come to life, it can be overwhelming to navigate through Montreal's eateries. Even natives book tasting tours through the Montreal Tourism Bureau (tourisme-montreal.org), where a guide will customize itineraries ranging from an afternoon's chocolate grazing to a full-day gallop through all four of the city-run markets. For a less-structured expedition, you can visit the neighborhoods sandwiched between the St. Lawrence and Prairies Rivers by hopping on and off the #55 Bus. Each district has its own streetlamp design, so if the pagodas don't signal you're in Chinatown, for instance, the mythological birds mounted on the light fixtures will.

If you only have time to visit one market, go to the largest, Jean-Talon, in Little Italy. Open year-round, 90 percent of its fruits, vegetables, meats and flowers are grown within 30 miles of the city. Vendors do business daily except on Christmas and New Year's, and you can fill up simply by sampling your way through the stalls. Try the spicy bison kebab at the wild-game stand, for starters, and don't miss the iced ciders and cheeses at Le Marché des Saveurs du Québec, a store devoted to artisanal foods from the region. It stocks 390 varieties of beer and 350 varieties of cheese, so the choices can be bewildering.

Quebecois alcohol is celebrated, too, at DNA, part upscale lounge, part fine-dining scene, a short walk from the Hotel Gault. As expected, the menu trumpets local ingredients and a broad booze selection. But there's a surprising emphasis on Canadian varietals, best experienced in the stellar wine tasting menu, which might include dishes like beef-heart tartar and tart regional berries from chef Derek Dammann, who honed his kitchen skills under Jamie Oliver in London.

The Mecca for gourmandizing pilgrims, though, is the famed nose-to-tail restaurant Au Pied de Cochon, located in the gentrified Plateau Mont-Royal district. Literally translated as "the foot of the pig," world-famous chef Martin Picard stuffs his beloved foie gras into everything: foie gras on poutine, in a hamburger, over an apple tart, sealed in a can with duck and, of course, in his eatery's namesake. By the time you leave Montreal, you'll feel like a stuffed pig yourself. ×××

540 Atlantic Ave., Boston
(617-451-1234)
trade-boston.com

BRIGHT LIGHTS, BIG CITY Trade's dining room is spare and elegant, just like its food.

IT'S COINCIDENTAL BUT NO less meaningful that when Jody Adams debuted her new restaurant, inspired by her international travels, diners had a front-row view of Occupy Boston across the street in Dewey Square. If Occupiers were concerned with maintaining justice and fairness in a world growing ever smaller and more commercialized, Adams' venture presents a sunnier vision of globalization. Here, multicultural influences combine and enhance one another. Adams doesn't recreate the green papaya salad she had in Cambodia, she references its sweet-spicy-sour flavors with a combination of tamarind and chilies for her avocado and green mango salad ($8). Her menu doesn't stake claim to the Mediterranean, Middle East, Southeast Asia, Mexico or North Africa; it touches upon their shores and then returns to the comfort of home.

Adams, for the most part, pulls off this wanderlust approach as her locally sourced ingredients are handled with deftness. Roasted Wellfleet littlenecks ($11) cup a smoky chili-nut sauce accented with charred scallions. Fried Island Creek oysters ($12) lend their brininess to buckwheat waffles drizzled with maple syrup and sour cream. The daily whole-roasted fish and cumin potatoes are draped with lemon-grass chutney ($24). Nothing feels overwrought. Even the 540 steak sauce—an everything-but-the-kitchen-sink combination that includes sundried tomatoes and dried figs—tastes clean, an intuitive complement to the tender Pineland Farm skirt steak ($28).

Not every dish manages to successfully balance the familiar with the foreign. The seared half chicken ($24) was misleadingly billed for those expecting some white meat, as the dish provided two chicken legs offset by a burnt orange wedge. A smattering of dates and pistachios over quinoa couldn't divert attention from the bitterness imparted by the orange. The chocolate budino ($9), a dark mousse made with Taza chocolate, was chock-full of salt granules, making it impossible to finish. While the chicken and budino incorporated unpleasant flavors, the whole artichoke ($9) was memorable for its blandness. Waterlogged from boiling, it was accompanied by an aioli missing the promised flavor of preserved lemon.

However, the moments that fall short of expectations serve to highlight how much labor goes into making something look effortless. If any item sets the bar for Adams' skill, it's her flatbread. Specifically her lamb sausage flatbread ($15). An oblong crust forms a canvas for the purples, reds and yellows of eggplant, peppers and Manchego. A zigzagging line of garlic yogurt completes the cavalier look. Crispy and bubbling straight from the brick oven, the easy manner of its composition belies the collaboration involved to create the dough. (Adams and her executive chef, Andrew Hebert, traveled to their oven's manufacturer in Seattle to develop their recipe.) Also delicious were the mussels ($14) and mushrooms and figs ($16) flatbreads, but they could've benefited from a freer hand with the toppings.

Like its food, Trade's setting is elegant and casual, perched in a glass-fronted 19th-century building with ironwork, a marble bar and tables of reclaimed wood. Peak lunch and dinner crowds can cause bottlenecks in service and front-of-the-house surliness—nothing a stiff drink, like the Cockney Mule ($10), won't cure. Should you fail to reserve a table in the dining room, you might find yourself crammed into one of the two communal tables, where overlapping conversations and elbows can cause awkwardness among strangers. But these isolated cases of forced friendliness are a small tradeoff for the experience of dining here. The overall atmosphere of Trade is comfort and simplicity, where, at least for the space of a meal, you can bracket the increasing difficulties and complexities of the world outside. ✖✖✖

Q: WHAT'S YOUR RECOMMENDATION FOR DRY WINTER SKIN?

A: In the winter time, your skin can become dreadfully dehydrated and scream for help. Moisturizers alone are just not enough.

My favorite remedy is Hydrasonic Skin Therapy. This high-tech treatment uses sophisticated ultrasound technology to hydrate, exfoliate, and nourish your skin.

First, exfoliation and hydration: A vibrating ultrasonic stainless steel wand coupled with warm water gently removes dead skin cells for an effective exfoliation. The ultrasonic sound wave action causes pores to open up and allows the cells to "drink-in" the water like a sponge for an amazing rehydration.

Next, nourishment: SkinHealth's proprietary antioxidants, peptides, enzymes and other specialized serums are applied in layers. Between each layer of serums, ultrasonic sound waves are used to drive the products in and allow them to penetrate to the deepest layers of the skin. This process nourishes the skin, making it healthier and more resilient to the perils of winter.

Finally, we protect your rejuvenated skin by applying sunscreen and essential lipids to provide a natural protective barrier to the elements.

The end result is fresh, well hydrated skin and a radiant glow!

BYE, THE BOOK

If at first you don't succeed, you've failed.

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

I'M SITTING IN A CONFERENCE room in Manhattan, talking business with a pair of powerful editors at a major publisher. They're discussing the marketing strategy for my book, thinking maybe we should angle for shelf space at Urban Outfitters. Frankly, if people buy the book, I don't care if they sell it in truck-stop vending machines next to Lot Lizard–brand prophylactics. But I don't say that, because I'm trying to project dignified authorial presence. And the less I say, the less chance there is that I'll commit verbal self-sabotage and blurt something like, "I ain't care what Urban Outhousers sell this dang readin' square, you citified ink varmints!"

This scenario sounds like a wannabe-author fantasy, but it was reality on a day last summer. I wrote a book proposal, it circulated through New York and I got meetings with publishers. So when will my book be out? Look for it at Barnes & Nowhere on the second Tuesday of never, because I got shot down.

You know those cheery American Idol contestants who get booted at the first audition and walk out the door still singing? I'm the opposite of that. If Randy gave me his sad "Dawg…," I'd run out of the room weeping and probably remain mute for a year afterward. So it was tough for me to breach the stalwart defenses of the publishing industry only to come away with a flat rejection. I wish I were the type of person to rage with indignation and redouble my efforts in the name of proving the doubters wrong, but I fear I'm too pragmatic. I embrace discouragement as a Darwinist corrective measure against irrational behavior. And writing a book definitely qualifies as irrational.

Even if you enjoy self-deluded confidence in your own brilliance, a potential author must also place faith in the meritocracy of the publishing industry. Given the success rate of published books—about seven out of 10 are failures—winning a book deal just means having the chance to fail on a bigger stage.

Consider Jon-Jon Goulian's The Man in the Grey Flannel Skirt, a recent memoir that earned a reported $750,000 advance from the aptly named Random House. I don't have access to the sales numbers, but the most popular Amazon review for Goulian's book was consulted by all of 16 people. By comparison, the top review for Snooki's latest book, A Shore Thing, was rated by 687 people. I'm not sure what's more depressing—Random House inadvertently illustrating the degree of dart-throwing haphazardness inherent in the publishing industry, or the fact that Snooki has more than one book.

I'd tell you where my book proposal went wrong, but the fact is that I don't really know. When publishers neg you, they don't sit you down for a conciliatory talk. They just bail, leaving you to fill the void with your own assumptions and wild conjecture. For instance, is it bad luck to be trapped in a building by character actor Luis Guzman? Because that happened just before my first meeting. I went into an office tower to visit a friend, and when I tried to leave I was stopped in the lobby by a guy with a walkie-talkie. "You can't go outside," he said. "We're shooting a TV show." When the reverse-bouncer eventually granted passage, I saw Luis Guzman standing nearby and deduced that the TV show was HBO's How to Make It in America. So while I was trying to make it in America, I was trapped inside a building by How to Make It in America. Luis Guzman is my personal talisman of misfortune.

Of course, it's possible that I was part of the problem, too. Perhaps I misread the book market. I don't need to tell you the crux of my proposal, but I can say that it wasn't about a beloved family dog or magical trolls or a trashy reality-show celebrity—to name three slam-dunk literary tropes. It wasn't the fictionalized dramatic retelling of a real-life story of intrigue, scandal and money. It wasn't called, I'm Both Shameless and Really Bad at My Job, which I assume is the title of the new book by the prosecutor who failed to convict Casey Anthony. Yes, that guy has a book deal.

Eventually, I'll give the book game another shot. But I'll be wiser, chastened by the 65-page bridge to nowhere that was my first proposal. Next time around, I'm avoiding nuance and openly campaigning to create the most sellable collection of monosyllabic grunts ever to grace a shelf at Wal-Mart. Here's one synopsis: A beloved family dog—make that a teenage family-dog—who is a shape-shifting troll, narrates a sexy story about one crazy summer at the shore. Hey Situation, you need a ghostwriter? ×××

HIGHS AND LOWS

Taking the pulse of Manhattan

EVERYTHING SHIFTS INTO high gear in New York City. A friend said to me, "I walk faster there, my heart beats more rapidly. It's almost like I'm afraid to slow my pace or look up at the buildings. If I do, maybe I'll get spotted as a tourist and someone will mug me." In an economic climate that is still, after more than three years, making everyone anxious, I thought a short journey to the Big Apple might be instructive. It's the city of more simultaneous highs and lows than any place I know. A city of folly and absurdity, visiting Manhattan reminds me that one of my principles in life is "contrast is everything."

In Boston, there's a sense we know each other, and we're secure in that knowledge. In New York, there's insecurity about almost everything. Am I rich enough? Am I on the boards that matter? What table do I have at the hot new restaurant? Do George Soros or Mort Zuckerman or Lesley Stahl go to my health club? Even the few Bostonians who care about that stuff realize they're out of step with everyone else. And most of them grew up in New York.

In Manhattan, I stayed in a hotel in the East 70s that used to be personal and comfy. Then they transformed it with high-tech splendor: glass, steel and stark furnishings. In every room, the shades, heat and TV were controlled by one instrument, a challenge to anyone over 40 years old. In my three-day stay, I could never get the picture on the flat screen to display anything bigger than six by six inches. For a type-A person, not ideal.

Outside the hotel, while waiting for a doorman to whistle me a cab, a long limo pulled to the curb and the driver came bouncing toward me. I was dressed in New York deal mode—suit, tie, cuff links, shades.

"Are you Tony Hawk?" the driver asked.

"Yes," I said. "Don't I look like the greatest skateboarder in the world?"

The driver, a Biafran transplant to New York, was nonplussed, totally at peace with his new environment. "Whatever, sir. Happy to serve you, Mr. Hawk."

On the way to a meeting in a taxi, I noticed that the cabbie was wearing a button-down shirt and what looked like a club tie. He looked as if he had walked out of a Vineyard Vines catalog.

"What are you doing here?" I asked.

"Driving a cab."

"Yes," I answered, "but you speak English as a first language and look like a preppy. What do you do when you're not driving?"

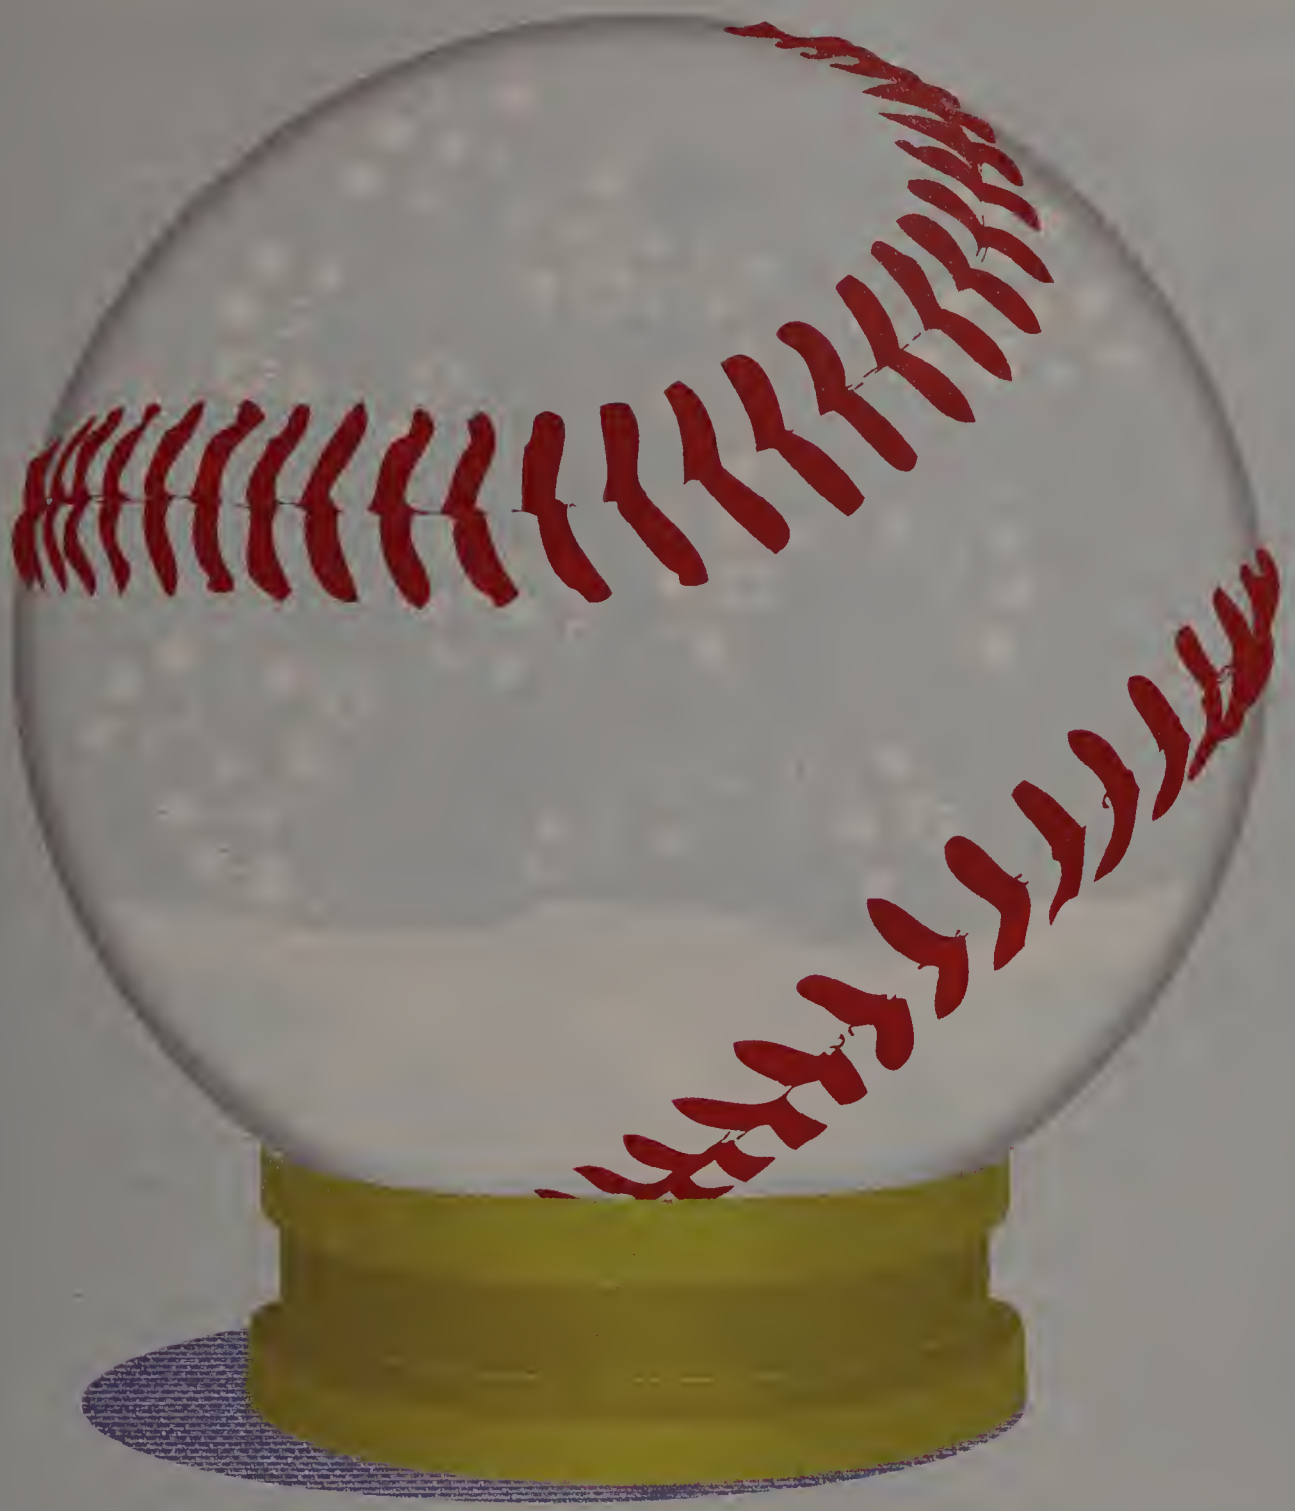
"I run a small hedge fund and trade all night in Hong Kong and Singapore. This keeps me amused and teaches me about the nooks and crannies of the city. Makes me a better trader."

"Did you work on Wall Street?"

"Sure. But I couldn't stand the B.S., the stupidity and bureaucracy. I'm a lone wolf." His eyes in the mirror were wild, and, I thought, either he's going to run amok with an Uzi someday, or become a monk in Tibet. Only in New York.

I had lunch that day with an old friend who used to be high up the pecking order in New York investment banking. He was agitated, his hair askew, his arms waving around. "It's all over," he ranted. "The world's gone mad. Look at this." He took a New York Times and pointed to items on each page, flipping madly. "The news. Every day the world is ending. Every day a different country going down the drain. The lunatics taking over the asylum. It's overwhelming."

"Look," I reasoned, "we're in 24-seven news surround-sound. Think about it. Every day for the rest of our lives the news is going to be terrible. But you have to screen it out. You have to rebrand, work harder, beat the competition. Most of the news in the world may be completely irrelevant to your business."



"Don't you know anything?" he yelled. "Don't you know that everything is exaggerated in New York? Let me just vent. It's part of our routine."

Being in Manhattan, I went to see the smash musical The Book of Mormon. I kept wondering if Mitt Romney might be in the audience. The show was raunchy, profane and hysterically funny. There were two Mormon couples sitting in front of me, looking furious. They stayed until the end. People were on their feet cheering, even standing on their seats. The Mormons headed for the exits, and I tapped one on the shoulder. "Why did you guys come?" I asked. The man looked at me soberly and said, "Best to stare the devil in the face. See what he's up to."

I ended my trip on a tranquil note. The Frick Collection, housed in one of New York's most gorgeous Fifth Avenue mansions, is always a treat. You wander from room to room, not quite believing that one family could amass such a collection of Fragonards, Titians, El Grecos and more. If you take a first date to the Frick, the surroundings are an aphrodisiac. Just don't take your date back to my hotel. A malfunctioning remote control could ruin the entire evening. ✖✖✖

FEEL THE BURN

If you can't take the heat, get out of my kitchen.

IN THE MORNINGS AFTER, THE kitchen staff goes on bucket patrol. Like criminals sweeping their tracks, they look for the stains and splatters of the fluids that erupted from their victims. Safely rinsed away, the evidence slides into the gutter and preparations begin for another Hell Night.

For 15 years, East Coast Grill has hosted the Hell Night dining series, which exalts the chili pepper and leads some acolytes to splash their esophageal offerings out on sidewalk. It's an assault on all the senses. Death metal throbs in the air. The restaurant is soaked in a devilish shade of red, like the mood lighting in Satan's boudoir. In the kitchen, minions in gas masks pollute the atmosphere with billowing clouds of capsaicin. Those who call for popsicles are openly mocked. Those who order the Pasta From Hell must sign a waiver. The latest rendition included the Trinidad scorpion Butch T pepper, newly crowned the world's hottest. Clocking in at more than 1,400,000 Scovilles (the unit for measuring spicy heat), it's roughly 250 times more powerful than a jalapeño and will puncture a hole in your stomach like a needle to a water balloon. Last month, EMTs arrived after one diner who ordered a fettuccini à la Mussolini passed out at the table. He awoke to find he had not earned his souvenir T-shirt.

Hell Night continues to expand and continues to sell out fast. I've been three times myself. A major part of its popularity stems from the fact that it's an experience hard to duplicate at home. Chilies are an intimidating ingredient, and with a couple false steps, a dish can go from picante to practical joke. Like many chili-heads, I've taken up the crutch of hot sauces. With each swing of my refrigerator door, the sound of rattling bottles proclaims my culinary cowardice.

Graciously, East Coast Grill owner Chris Schlesinger and head chef Jason Heard helped me select three peppers that spicy food fans should have in their pantry and offered pointers on how to tame the flames. "People misunderstand heat," says Schlesinger, sitting in front of an arsenal of chilies. "Heat is a weapon, a blunt instrument. You need to combine things to be effective."

Last month, EMTs arrived after one diner passed out at the table.

Any good soldier should know his weapon, so here are some SCORCHING HOT FUN FACTS:

*People are affected by different chilies in different ways. A Chipotle could put a smile on my face and tears in your eyes. A Manzano could have me doubled over while you're asking for seconds.

*The smaller the pepper, the bigger the burn. The seeds and ribs pack the heat, so a lower meat-to seed-ratio means a magnification of pain.

*A friend in neuroscience told me the area in the brain that responds to nicotine is next to the area that responds to capsaicin. So were you to serve chile relleno to a dinner guest back from a cigarette break, you'd be digging shards of skull out of the carpet for weeks.

The first pepper that Heard recommends is the wrinkled little cherry bomb known as the Scotch bonnet.

Great for seasoning, Scotch bonnets can be diced up for salsas or dropped into stews. Schlesinger describes the Scotch bonnet as "floral and nuanced." And, like a perfume, you really don't want to get any in your eyes. At 100,000 to 350,000 Scovilles, a handful of Scotch bonnets is like a book of matches: great for building heat, but playing with them could lead to disaster.

Tip from Heard: Keep the burn where it belongs. "Always wear gloves. And when you go to the bathroom, wash your hands before and after."

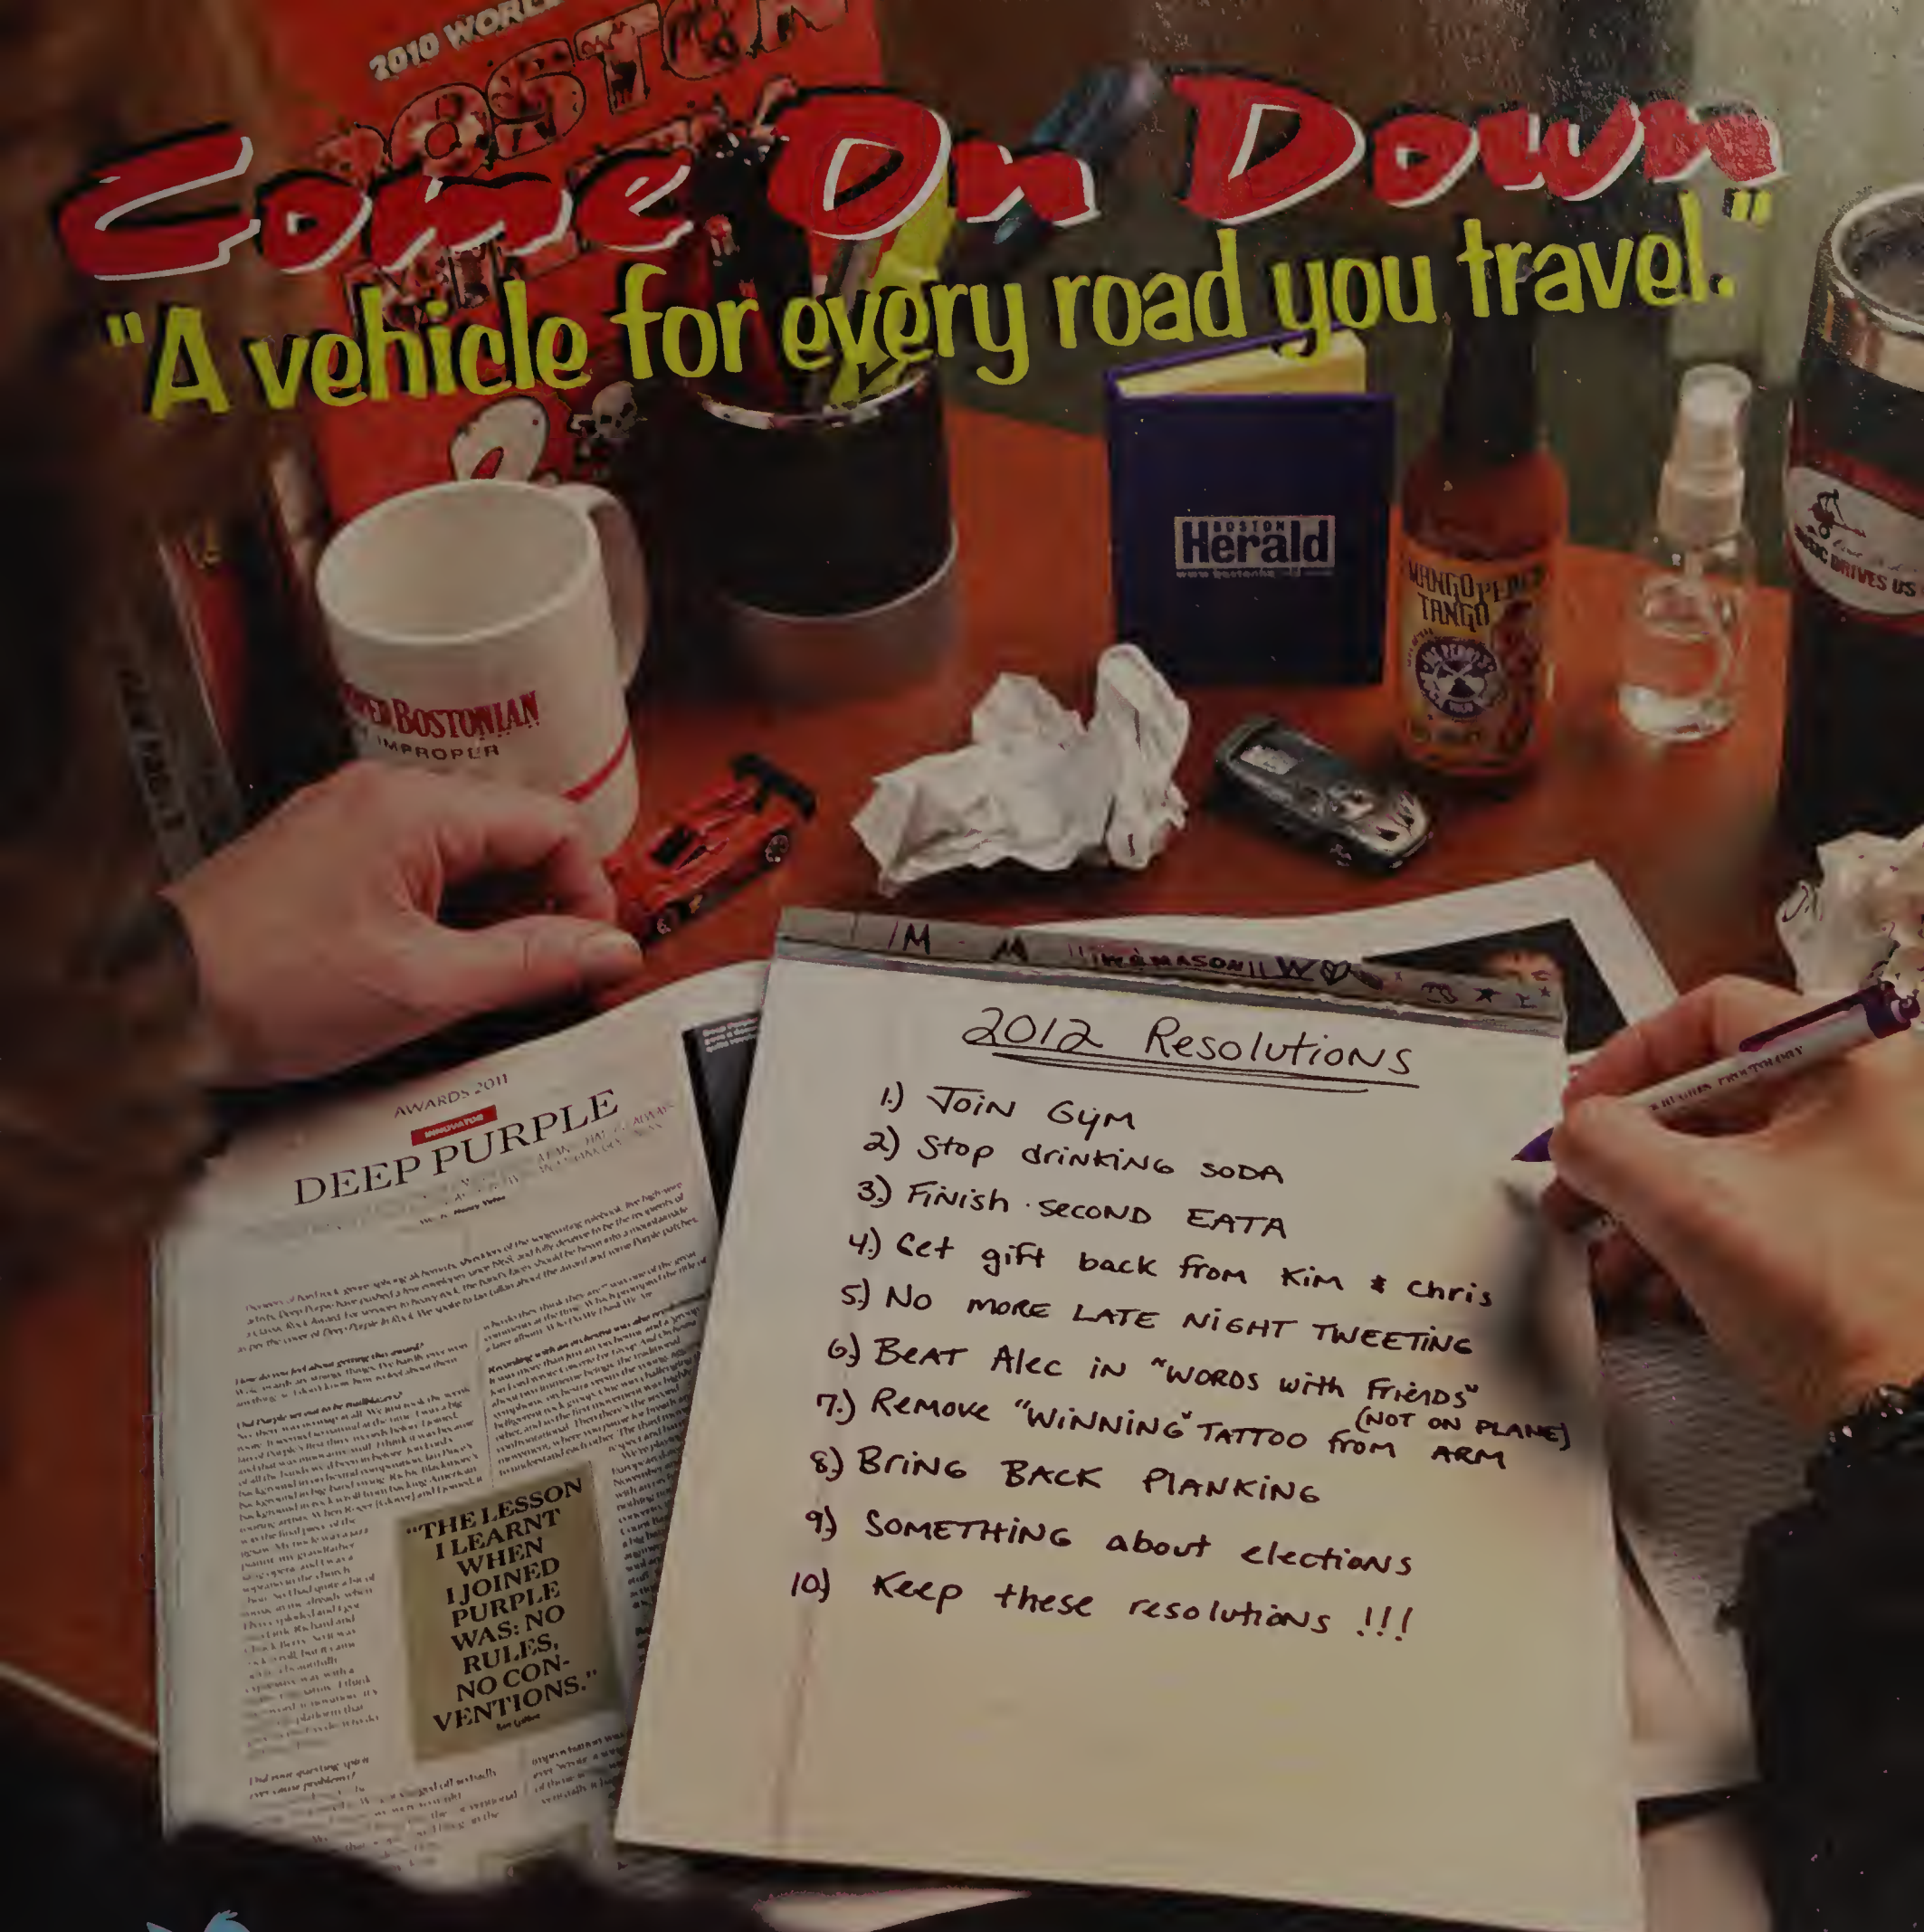
Next, there's the medium-sized pepper, like a serrano or poblano. Heard encourages neophytes to "substitute this in for when you would've used bell pepper before you knew anything about chilies."

One trick to try is to flame roast a serrano on your stovetop. Once the skin starts to pop and blacken, stick the pepper in a paper bag and let it steam, after which the skin should peel off easily. Dice it up and toss with orange segments and lime juice. A relish of sorts, I spooned mine into a sandwich and found the spark of spice collides nicely with the spark of acid before fading into a long, slow burn.

Tip from Heard: Scrape the seeds out before dicing, as roasting makes them bitter.

For a quick, biting heat that doesn't linger, there's the slender green or red bullet called the Thai bird chili. Use it to flavor vinegar, shave into curries, or make your own batch of nuoc cham. For this savory Vietnamese condiment, mix a cup of fish sauce with two teaspoons of rice wine vinegar and five thinly sliced peppers. While Heard suggests dashing nuoc cham on spring rolls or grilled beef, I can attest it also adds bold flavor to sandwiches. (Hey, I'm adventurous at the table, but I can be lazy in the kitchen.)

Tip from Heard: Whatever you make is going to be hotter the next day, as the capsaicin has had a chance to spread and saturate.



In your own endeavors, remember Schlesinger's call for combination. Variety is the spice of life, but in the kitchen, it's variety that's going to keep spice in check. So in the beginning, be merciful. For any novice, the goal should be making food people can keep down. Leave regurgitation to the professionals. ×××

YEAR IN REVIEW: ON THEO, TITO, PERK AND STANLEY

5 BIGGEST STORIES OF 2011

Bruins Raise the Cup Far and away the greatest, most historic highlight of 2011, the Bruins run to the Cup has only been enhanced by the team's sustained success. Make no mistake, last year wasn't a fluke. The former black sheep of the Boston sports family is suddenly bringing home straight A's and sleeping with the prom queen. (In Tyler Seguin's case, literally.)

NEED A LIFT Thomas and the B's saved the sports year.

Sox Crumble in September On the flipside is the disgusting story of the Sox, who had the nerve to DRINK BEER AND EAT CHICKEN IN THE CLUBHOUSE!! Just kidding, I couldn't care less. I'm more concerned with the sewage that's spilled out of the owner's box since the collapse. Who in their right mind would want to work for these guys, and what's it say about Bobby V that he does? Seriously, I need a rational explanation. Somebody get Jim Rice!

The Kendrick Perkins Trade Regardless of where you stood on the deal, can we all finally agree it was a disaster? Nenad Krstic is in Russia, Jeff Green's out for the year, and that Clippers first-round pick? Thanks to Chris Paul, it's in the mid-20s, at best. (But on the bright side, at least they got rid of Nate Robinson.)

Theo and Tito Take Off After everything that happened, Terry Francona probably had to go. And after that, you understand why Theo Epstein wanted to leave. Still, it's surreal that when pitchers and catchers report in February, neither of these guys will be joining the team. Although I'm sure ownership will still blame the pair for anything that goes wrong.

The Rise of Rob Gronkowski From a low-profile, second-round pick to a touchdown-scoring, pornstar-slaying cult hero, Gronk's the word in Foxborough. And at 22, he's only getting better. So what's next: His own variety show? His own line of Eau de Gronk cologne? Eh, I'd settle for a Super Bowl ring.

1 ONE MVP

In some years, it might be difficult to pick one MVP among Boston's four major sports teams, but this isn't one of those years. Tim Thomas, take a bow! And another one... and another and, you know what, just keep going. But don't look back, Tuukka's coming on strong!

4 WORST DAYS OF 2011

Jan. 16: Jets 28, Patriots 21... Feels like a lifetime ago, but I'll never forget that walk out of Gillette. The shock of having watched the Pats fall flat. The frustration of that pathetic, clock-eating drive. The image of Rex Ryan prancing off the field, smiling brighter than the night he got his first foot job.

May 11: Heat 97, Celtics 87... It's hard enough seeing the Celtics lose in the second round. But losing in the second round to LeBron? More painful than a dislocated elbow.

Sept. 28: Orioles 4, Red Sox 3; Ray 8, Yankees 7... Between Papelbon's blown save in Baltimore and Evan Longoria's walk-off in Tampa, the last night of the 2011 regular season was a miserable little slice of Sox history. Thanks again, guys!

Oct. 28: David Stern cancels the beginning of the season... The NBA was ultimately saved, but thanks to the ridiculous 66-game schedule, the stench of Stern's decision will linger like a Big Baby fart.

2 NICE SURPRISES

THE HANK POTEAT AWARD Anytime I feel like making fun of a no-name Patriots defensive back, I'll remember the story of Kyle Arrington, who, in one season, has gone from a punch line to leading the league in interceptions. A welcome sight, what with Devin McCourty taking the season off.

RYDER ON THE STORM For most of last season, Michael Ryder was a right-winged Dennis Wideman, but he scored eight goals in the playoffs—after only 18 all regular season—and became the unlikeliest hero of the Bruins' unlikely run to the Cup. (And don't forget: He was Boston's second best playoff goalie!)

3 WHAT-IFS

What if the Bruins Lost Game 7? Not in Vancouver, but in the first round, against Montreal. Would Claude Julien still be the coach? Would Peter Chiarelli still be in office? Would we even be alive?!? Maybe, but we'd live in a very different world; one without joy, honor or Brad Marchand's public massacring of "Black and Yellow."

What if Rondo Didn't Get Hurt? Once he snapped his elbow against the Heat, the Celtics (like their point guard) had no shot. But were they doomed either way? Seeing that the C's lost the first two games with Rondo, it's fair to assume yes. But that won't stop us from pretending otherwise.

What if the Sox Snuck Into the Playoffs? Two more wins. That's all it would've taken. If they make the playoffs, maybe Theo stays. Maybe Tito stays. Maybe Bob Hohler's sources aren't as motivated to ruin people's lives, and the media never embarks on its pathetic beer-and-chicken witch hunt. Maybe the Sox wake up and win the Series?

"Being a director is about being crazy enough to climb a mountain no one else will climb."

Soroff On DIANE PAULUS

The theater director opens up about money, manipulation and taking Porgy and Bess to Broadway.

DIANE PAULUS IS THE ARTISTIC DIRECTOR of the American Repertory Theater. Born and raised in New York, she earned degrees from Harvard and Columbia. A Tony award nominee for her revival of Hair, her recent production of The Gershwins' Porgy and Bess created a firestorm of controversy and is now headed to Broadway. She has directed such diverse productions as The Donkey Show and Prometheus Bound, a rock opera based on the Greek tragedy by Aeschylus. She has conducted numerous operas with the Chicago Opera Theater, is a professor in Harvard's English department and received an honorary degree from the Boston Conservatory. Paulus lives in New York and Cambridge.

Jonathan Soroff: In three adjectives, what are your greatest qualities as a director?
Diane Paulus: Patient, compassionate and demanding.

Thing you'd most like to be known for?
Being a good mother.

Do you read what critics write?
All the time.

How do you feel about critics in general?
I think if we could talk about the intentions of our work, we could create a better understanding. The critics could speak to your intentions and say what's successful and what's not, but at least they wouldn't misinterpret what it is that you're trying to do.

Did Stephen Sondheim's scathing comments about Porgy and Bess in The New York Times hurt your feelings?
It was a tribute to the power of the play and what a great work it is that it elicited such a powerful reaction.

Does it ever bug you?
I'm always fascinated. I'm often surprised. But I don't find it demoralizing. I'm always trying to figure out what they're seeing. While you might not agree with a point they're making, they're seeing something, and I enjoy trying to figure out what that is.

Do you ever walk out of plays?
Very rarely. I'm kind of there as a scientist, so even if something isn't working, I'm interested to see how the performance develops.

Your own worst train wreck on the stage?
It's funny. The things you think are going to be awful often turn out to be really amazing moments. When we were opening Hair in London, we had so many lights in the theater—the Gielgud—that we had to bring in a generator. But the day of the invited dress rehearsal, we blew all the power. I had to go in front of the audience and make a speech, and it sort of became a rallying cry because the audience was in on the problem.

Do you feel like you've discovered any major talents during your tenure here?
We've had absolutely amazing artists come through here. Everyone from Colin Donnell, who was the star of Johnny Baseball and is starring in Anything Goes now, and Norm Lewis as Porgy, which I think is the role of his career.

What do you think George Gershwin would say about Porgy and Bess*?*
I would hope he'd say this production captures his love of the story and his dream of making a piece about African American culture.

Is being a director a power trip?
I'm sure there are directors who enjoy that aspect of it, but being a director is about being crazy enough to climb a mountain no one else will climb, and you've got to just encourage everyone to keep on going, when they're all tired and hungry and want to stop.

Biggest peeve as a member of the audience?
False emotion. When I don't believe what they're saying or doing.

Are you a manipulative person?
Manipulative for a good cause. I feel that as a director, I'll do whatever it takes to get the result I'm looking for. So you can call that manipulative or you could call it drive and determination.

Ever purposefully treat an actor poorly just to elicit a certain reaction for the play?
No. Not my style at all. I think movie directors might do that to get a take, but in the theater you have to come in and rehearse with them every day. To me, it's a question of giving the performer permission to go someplace dark or unpleasant.

Does The Donkey Show make lots of money?
It's an anchor at the Oberon theater that subsidizes the other work we present there.

Were you one of those, "Hey, guys, let's put on a show!" type of kids?
Definitely. Completely. "Let's do The Three Bears!" and I was directing my parents at the age of four. [Laughs.] I was very bossy as a kid.

When you were a little girl, did you love playing with dolls?
I hated dolls. I was mad for stuffed animals. I carried a little dog around with me everywhere. I left it on a plane and all I had left was its ear, but I carried that around for years.

Thoughts on Broadway's Spiderman*?*
I saw it, and I actually really liked it. I thought it was a fun night in the theater. But I wish the music had been better.

How do you feel about the Disney-fication of Broadway?
What's great about Broadway is you reach a lot of people. So there's obviously something in those Disney shows that people really respond to. But at the same time, there are still shows like Book of Mormon, which is really smart and edgy and funny.

Biggest difference between non- and for-profit theater?
Everything we do is about our mission, which is to expand the boundaries of theater. What is theater? Where do you find it? How do you present it? Commercial theater is designed to make a profit.

Is your Tony award acceptance speech ready?
That's bad karma. ✖✖✖

of Highly Attractive People

THEY'D LOVE

FOR YOU TO BELIEVE THEY WERE BORN THAT WAY—that hotness is some mysterious state achieved only via a blessing direct from the cosmos. But the truth is, most of the preternaturally beautiful people who walk among us—Gisele and a few others notwithstanding—got that way by following a concrete set of steps, tricks and rituals. Some of those are obvious (diet, exercise, teeth brushing). Others are downright bizarre (the now-rampant practice of injecting your own butt fat into your face). But the most effective regimes du moment can be broken down into seven habits that are easy to emulate, even by us mortals.

1. GET POKED

"Bostonian attitudes toward injections versus cosmetic surgery have changed drastically in the last decade," says Dr. Leonard Miller of the Boston Center for Facial Rejuvenation, who happens to be a whiz at both. "It used to be that no one ever admitted to doing either one. Now they still won't talk openly about the knife, but they're far more comfortable talking about needles—especially those that are the most common, like Botox." These days, even that standby is getting wielded in ways that go beyond the forehead. "I use it for all kinds of tricks," says Nichole Brennan at Skin Deep Med Spa. "Under the arms to stop sweating. Around the mouth to get rid of smoker's lips, or around the eye for crow's feet. In the neck to help sculpt the jaw line." The latter procedure is one of the most sought-after at the moment, she says. "A little in the jaw muscle reduces a square-shaped face by smoothing it into more of an oval."

"Great extensions look clean, soft, separated and full—like real lashes."

Reshaping faces is the order of the day, explains Masha Banar, the board-certified physician's assistant who heads up Newton Centre's Visage Sculpture. "We can use Juvéderm to reshape noses by filling in bumps," she says. "Radiesse to define cheeks, and it's great for chins—lots of men want to have a sharpened jaw line. And then there's Sculptra, which can be used for all of the above, lasts about a year longer than anything else and has a result that's absolutely natural looking." (Filler injection prices vary greatly depending on the area treated; schedule a consultation for an estimate.)

2. BE A FLAKE

The undisputed catchall for skincare are peels, which soften fine lines and scarring, as well as curb breakouts. Thanks to the caliber of our medical community, Boston brims with people who know how to administer them to revolutionary effect.

"There are almost as many kinds of peels out there as there are faces," says licensed esthetician Deborah Macomber, owner of Baby Face Skin Spa in Norwell. "The trick is knowing that one size doesn't fit all." Though some treatments are able to penetrate the epidermis without causing an adverse reaction, medical-grade peels like the SkinMedica Vitalize Peel, done in a series of three to six ($150 per treatment), cause just a bit of irritation. "It prevents and treats various forms of acne and post-acne scarring like you can't believe," she says. "And exfoliates dry dead skin cells to promote cellular regeneration."

Kathy Nash, clinical director and R.N. at Ardan Medspa + Salon, agrees. "To work well, a peel has to be tailored to a client's skin type." Her favorite solution is Régenique—essentially one part facial to three parts medical treatment ($250 per session). First she swoops in with a medical-grade microdermabrasion, chasing it with a chemical peel and customized treatments based on individual needs. An ultrasound with electrostimulation provides the finishing touch, helping the skin absorb the various treatments. "It causes a subtle peeling a few days later with absolutely no down time," says owner Helena Cohen.

3. UNDERGO REGULAR LASHINGS

They may seem a tiny matter, but devotees know the power of properly applied eyelash extensions. "They literally can transform a face," says Andrea Starr, owner of the just-opened eyeStarr by Andrea. "You can do them for the most conservative clients on one end of the spectrum, or make them full and long for more glam types." The go-to extensions girl for Red Sox and Bruins players' wives (actress Molly Sims is also a fan), Starr emphasizes not just the prettiness of her results, but the practicality ($350 for a full set). "They're a lifestyle change because you wake up with them," she says. "Having them on cuts your makeup time in half, since you don't even need any other eye makeup. They're so natural looking, you don't want to cover them up."

The real beauty of fake lashes: They only require upkeep every three to six weeks, and you can't spot the imposters. "If they're done right, they should never look false," says Santina Sharpe at SalonCapri in Dedham (where lashes range from $125–$215). "Great extensions look clean, soft, separated and full—like real lashes, but much, much better."

4. THINK SMALL

Most conventional workouts worship at the altar of big muscles, but it's actually the minuscule ones—aka the accessory muscles—that determine body shape and structure. Hence the runaway success of celeb trainers like Tracy Anderson, who's whipped the likes of Gwyneth and Madonna into chiseled shape. Locally, she's got followers like fashion designer Daniela Corte. "It absolutely changes how your body looks and feels," says the toned Corte, who works her major muscles once per week with Equinox trainer Mike D'Angelo, then spends the rest of her weekdays doing two-hour workouts to Tracy Anderson Metamorphosis videos. These are filled with routines designed to trip up the body's little muscles and yield a dancer's physique. (The 90-day video program is $89.97 on tracyandersonmethod.com.) "It's the most challenging, effective workout I've ever done," Corte says. "They switch the program every few weeks, so your body has to constantly readjust."

The quest to reengineer muscular structure is also behind the deluge of Barre method classes taking over studios far and wide. "Small isometric movements make a very big difference," says Kellie Lynch, owner of Balance Studio in Cohasset, who heads up the studio's 60-minute, gasp-inducing Balanced Barre workshop ($15 per class). "We generally don't use our small muscle groups, which this does. And it makes a huge difference."

"When people look shiny and bright, it's often what they're doing nutritionally."

5. DON'T CRASH AND BURN

The world hardly suffers from a lack of extreme low-cal diets. One problem, explains clinical nutrition and wellness consultant Aubrey Thompson, is that they don't always help your looks.

"Getting thin fast by under-eating doesn't address any of the real weight issues people have," she says. "It doesn't help you if you're holding weight in the wrong places, or are unable to retain muscle, or are constantly fighting cravings," says the head of Living Balance in Norwood.

Also damaging is what bad nutrition does to the rest of our bodies. "What we eat always correlates to how our hair and skin look. If you're getting the right nutrients for your body, your face glows, blemishes clear up and even dry skin issues disappear." On the flip side, she says, "When people look shiny and bright, it's often something they're doing right nutritionally, not adding something topically."

To decode her clients' individual nutritional needs, Thompson performs "metabolic typing." This involves a hair mineral analysis plus adrenal and thyroid tests to find patterns that relate to the person's gastrointestinal functions. "Basically, I learn about their genetic requirements, see how they convert food into energy and how their nervous system functions. That's how I can tell if they need more or less of something." Then she carves out a customized eating plan (with supplements to reverse any long-term deficiencies) fortified by weekly or biweekly consultations over a multi-month period ($125 an hour, with the option of purchasing discounted packages). During that time, she says, she sees the effects of food as improved nutrition shows in clients' skin, eyes and faces. "It isn't just being skinny that makes you attractive," she insists.

6. STYLE YOURSELF SVELTE

Best friends will tell you the tough facts of life: Your butt looks gargantuan in those jeans, for instance, or your cutoffs should be banished to the '90s where they belong. Personal stylists may land the blow more gently, but ultimately serve the same purpose. More than just personal shoppers, stylists build a trust with clients and work with them to find the most flattering combinations. Just ask the wives of Celtics, Patriots and Red Sox players who count on Susan Slosberg (prices vary per hour; visit susanslosberg.com to schedule a free one-hour consultation). She ferrets out, for example, a belted jacket to camouflage a thick waist or a calf-length pencil skirt to lengthen a leg. Ann-Elizabeth Rueppel, a Slosberg client, describes her as a "devil sells Prada" kind of stylist—meaning one who pushes pieces that aren't just in fashion for the moment, but are a quality investment. And if that investment ever becomes too steep? You can always do the next best thing—grab a brutally honest friend and a three-way mirror.

7. TRESS FOR SUCCESS

People with thick or curly hair want sleek locks. People with thin hair want full. It seems that the only human beings happy with their hair are in the pages of the Victoria's Secret catalog, where frizz and oiliness don't exist, and perfect, flippy curls always remain in place.

It boils down to texture. Genetic as it may be, it can be toyed with—if not out-and-out altered. "Our full keratin treatment reduces 100 percent of frizz and 60 percent of any wave," says Ashley Mason of James Joseph Salon. "It also reduces drying time by 60 percent." The treatment, during which hair is coated with keratin and ironed in eight-inch sections, is similar to other keratin treatments around town, but doesn't use formaldehyde. (They start at $375 for a three-hour treatment.) "You're not chemically reconstructing the hair, you're adding a protein back in, so it's actually making it stronger. The result is lively but tame hair for three to four months."

The closest thing to the inverse—turning limp 'dos into thick ones—isn't a procedure but a product invented in an MIT lab. Living Proof's Full line ($26 for 5 oz. thickening mousse; livingproof.com) contains Poly Beta Amino Ester-1, a molecule the company invented to mimic the feel of thicker hair. It's a temporary effect, sure, but then, so is the one you get from a push-up bra. ✖✖✖

THE PODCAST KING

HOW MARC MARON TURNED STAND-UP INTO DOWNLOADABLE SUCCESS

_BY EZRA DYER

"THERE'S AN ORIGIN STORY, AND THERE ARE ONLY SO MANY WAYS TO TELL IT," says the man behind the massively popular podcast WTF With Marc Maron. The guy who regularly teases out the most fascinating interviews in Hollywood is keenly attuned to the perils of interviews. One of which is the boilerplate response that's elicited when an interviewee is fielding an exceptionally obvious, oft-asked question. Like, "How did you create a podcast in which you interview people like Ben Stiller or Conan O'Brien in your garage, and that's drawn more than 32 million downloads?" He probably gets that one a lot.

"I'd done some radio-style interviewing at Air America, and I knew there were tricks to it," Maron says. "Someone's on there for a reason, and you have to guide them toward that reason. I was always trying to get authentic moments out of bloviating politicians or people who were trying to sell something, and it was discouraging that you weren't able to have real conversations with people."

Maron parted ways with now-defunct Air America in 2009 after years of conflict. But he remained frustrated with punditry. "I got disillusioned with politics," Maron says. "The process in this country is what it is, and I gave up on changing it."

Eventually Maron started doing long-form video interviews, including one with writer Bruce Wagner. "That ended up taking two hours, and I was like, 'What am I going to do with this?'" Thus sprung the idea for WTF, wherein Maron conducts lengthy interviews with comedians, actors and showbiz types—often from his garage, but sometimes (as with Robin Williams) on the subject's home turf. On Sept. 1, 2009, WTF kicked off with comedian Jeff Ross.

Seth Olenick

"When I started the podcast, I was in a sad, depressed place, and I kind of needed to talk to people for reasons other than interviewing them," Maron says. "I needed to talk to my peers. Then they began to meet me halfway and talk about themselves."

Some portion of Maron's audience might be unaware that his connection to guys like Louis C.K. and Dane Cook stems from his own career as a stand-up. Now that Maron's taking WTF on the road—he has two shows at the Wilbur Theatre on Jan. 27—he's realizing that people who show up don't necessarily know he's a comedian. "I'm in this awkward place," he says. "I know what my album sales are. I know that most people don't know who the f I am. Most of the people coming out because of the podcast have never been to a comedy show. A lot of people haven't heard my best jokes from four or five years ago—they're surprised to learn that I do stand-up, and that's what I've built my life around."

Maron forged his career in the crucible of the '80s Boston comedy scene, surrounded by guys like Lenny Clarke, Don Gavin and Barry Crimmins. Testing a potential direction for his life, he tried material onstage at the legendary Ding Ho while he was still a student at Boston University. "I remember spilling my drink on my pants, and I had to go up onstage with the front of my pants all wet," Maron says. "I was so paralyzed by fear, I don't now how I got through any of it."

After graduating, Maron moved to L.A. but returned to Boston after a year to devote himself to comedy. "Boston's very important to me. In 1988, I used to go to Play It Again Sam's. That was the beginning of my comedy life. I used to work in Nick's when I was 21 or 22. I was there the night Bobcat Goldthwait had a garage sale onstage at Stitches. Catch a Rising Star in Cambridge had a huge impact on my life. That scene was very defining for all of us.

"I was living in an attic in Somerville, and it was all about comedy," Maron says. "I drove all over the place for gigs. I went to Machias, Maine, and opened for Frank Santos, the X-rated hypnotist. I paid a lot of dues."

Maron's career in stand-up and radio eventually took him to New York and San Francisco before finally settling in L.A., where he bought a house that he calls the Cat Ranch. The setting—Maron, his subject and two microphones out in the garage—foments a casual, just-shootin'-the-breeze atmosphere that encourages authentic conversations that might wilt beneath the synthetic glare of TV-studio lights.

And yet, those millions of downloads are a tantalizing signal that Maron's introspective comedy and brand of personal interviews could soon outgrow the confines of the Cat Ranch. The Wilbur shows will explore both angles, with the first performance a stand-up act and the second one a live version of the podcast. Late last November, Maron sold out Seattle's 800-seat Neptune Theatre, the first time he's packed a venue of that size. And later this year, Maron will publish his second memoir—presuming that he finishes it. "Like everything else, I'm waiting until I get to a state of complete panic," Maron says. "The book's due in March. It's hard when the topic is me, and it's a whole book. The process of writing is kind of rewarding, but to get to that is a lot of stress."

The WTF interviews aren't always stress-free, either. Comedian Gallagher, he of the giant hammer and watermelons, walked out over a perceived slight. And Maron's two interviews with Carlos Mencia spawned some cringe-worthy moments as Mencia attempted to explain his reputation as a joke thief. In the first interview, Maron realized that Mencia was attempting to use the WTF forum as a means of positing an alternate narrative for his career—one that didn't ring true. "With Mencia, I wanted to know about the burden of being a pariah. I had to get him back in there to address specific things," Maron says. "I don't relish confrontation. It's very hard for me to sit in those moments and keep my mouth shut, because my natural inclination is to try to smooth things over. With Mencia, I had to make myself keep my mouth shut. I needed to just let him talk, and he did." In fact, Mencia probably would've done himself a favor if he'd stopped talking. "Toward the end of that interview, I started to laugh uncontrollably," Maron says, "because he just kept going."

Most episodes of WTF, though, are collegial deep-dives into the subject's lives, eliciting the kind of conversations that rarely develop in the context of a typical talk-show interview. When an actor or comedian has six minutes on a TV set in front of hundreds of thousands of people, the tendency is to tell a quick anecdote or two, avoiding the danger of a truly unscripted conversation. Maron—himself a frequent guest on late-night shows (he's appeared as a guest of Conan O'Brien 46 times)—understands the constraints that lead to the "Hey, what's going on with your kids?" style of interview, and he relishes defying those conventions. When Jimmy Fallon encouraged him to wing it during an appearance on Late Night, Maron ended up doing an impersonation of Dane Cook. On a recent episode of Conan, Maron used his airtime to tell an elaborate story about his battle with imaginary mouth cancer. The man is a 10th-degree interview black-belt, regardless of which side of the desk he's on.

Sometimes, WTF interviews lead to new late-night material for Maron's subjects. "I did an interview with Bryan Cranston, and it's tricky because he's an actor," Maron says. "He's grounded and has boundaries. And as we were talking, these stories came up that were new to him. And a week later, he went on Letterman and told those same stories. I suspect that he mined those moments from my interview, but I don't know for sure. I wish I could get some confirmation of that. These things happen organically with me."

The question is: Could the Cat Ranch magic be exported to a format that might work for TV? For all Maron's gimlet-eyed realism about show business, it's an intriguing idea. One challenge would be the issue of time—the great moments on WTF are, in part, a function of the leisurely pace. "Over an hour, people will reveal themselves," Maron says. "The thing that happens on my show—no matter your preconceptions of celebrities—it's hard after an hour not to see them as people."

The other issue concerns the scientific phenomenon that observation affects reality. It's just harder for people to be loose when there are cameras around. "People ask me why I don't do video, and I say that audio is a very unique and intimate experience," Maron says. "I find that people act differently on camera. The intimacy and magic of what goes on in my garage with two mikes is unique to the audio medium and unique to the situation of my garage. All I'm gunning for are some authentic conversations. So the challenge would be structuring a show that would create some type of intimacy. Is it feasible? I'd like to try. There's gotta be some space between Charlie Rose and Conan."

In the meantime, the kid who went onstage at Ding Ho with wet pants is coming to the Wilbur. The psychic pain that spawned WTF has led to a productive place, bringing Marc Maron back to Boston, back to the stage. "I'm finding peace of mind and finding success in what I'm doing now," he says. "All I've wanted to be was a comic." ×××

A LOOK AHEAD

Produced by ALEXANDRA HALL
Photography by JOEL BENJAMIN

EVEN THE MOST MODISH SHADES OF LIP GLOSS COME AND GO.
Foundation textures shift as if on a fault line, and today's brow highlights quickly fade to last-season status. But for some of us, impermanence is half the fun—a new year means a new roster of ideas and revelations. So we chased down four of the city's star makeup artists for their favorite cosmetic trends for 2012.

ARTIST:
LAUREN GENATOSSIO

TREND:
Strong Brows

"Brows are the single most defining feature of the face. When perfectly shaped, they allow your natural beauty to shine through. The fact that we're trending toward stronger brows is exciting for me. Glowing skin, berry lips and a simple eye finish the fresh look. It's instant chic."

FAVORITE BRANDS:
Sarra (her own line), Laura Mercier for its attention to flawless skin and Giorgio Armani for its colors and textures.

Genatossio offers brow shaping, makeup applications and lessons at her studios. 840 Summer St., Boston (617-269-8999); 104A North St., Hingham (781-749-5599); sarraboston.com

Models: Layla, Marcella, Olivia and Asia/Maggie, Inc.

ARTIST:
DANI WAGENER

TREND:
Clean-lined Eyes

"I lined the entire rim of the eye with black-gel eyeliner and added a nice coat of mascara. The liner is only on the inside lash line, and the lid itself has only a sweep of matte peach shadow. It's a great way to add a little glam to an otherwise clean look."

FAVORITE BRANDS: Temptu for lightweight finish and coverage, Make Up For Ever for a variety of waterproof choices and pigments, and Kevyn Aucoin for a range of colors—particularly in blushes.

Wagener offers makeup lessons and private and group appointments at her studio. 125 Newbury St., Boston (617-236-0415) daniwagener.com

ARTIST:
KACIE CORBELLE

TREND:
Bold Lips

"There's a shade out there for everyone, so it's a matter of playing with different ones to see what looks best with your skin tone and hair color. The only trick with a bold lip is to keep everything else on the face very neutral so the look doesn't become overwhelming. Balance is key."

FAVORITE BRANDS: Motives by Loren Ridinger for coral lipsticks, MAC for its diverse products and Make Up For Ever for its pigments.

Corbelle offers private appointmcnts. Ennis Inc. (781-863-1555) ennisinc.com; (781-858-8018) kaciecorbelle.com

TAVI DE LA ROSA

TREND:
Green and Gold Eye Shadows

"There's a real focus on the eye, but it isn't the usual smoky scenario. It's a gel liner on the top lids and a shadow of metallic green highlighted with gold. The result is bright but not overly dramatic. It's a wash of light color that keeps everything very natural, which makes it perfect for day."

FAVORITE BRANDS: Giorgio Armani foundations, Make Up For Ever eye and lip colors and NARS for its blushes and bronzers.

De la Rosa offers on-location, private and group appointments. (617-785-6006)

Nicholas Burnham

A Favorable Revue

MISTER ACT

ANYONE WITH AN IPOD knows that life has a soundtrack. The right song transforms a sidewalk into center stage, amps up ennui to full-blown melancholy or turns a stroll into a jazz-hands moment. Locals and long-time members of the Bang Group, Jeffrey Kazin and David Parker (son of famed novelist Robert B.) indulge the reality-meets-revue zeitgeist with their semiautobiographical cabaret, Misters and Sisters—A Love Story in Song and Dance. Romantic standards from the American songbook, including "Baby, It's Cold Outside" and "Tea for Two," take a modern twist when played by the jaunty duo. Sequins aplenty, Misters and Sisters appears at Oberon on Jan. 11 and 18. MELISSA HERRICK

Misters and Sisters—A Love Story in Song and Dance plays on Jan. 11 and 18, $20–$50, at Oberon, 2 Arrow St., Cambridge (866-811-4111) cluboberon.com.

Pop Tarts

Factory Made Andy Warhol is usually remembered for his prints of soup cans and Marilyn Monroe, but the wig-rocking pop art legend also tried his hand at film, recording a bunch of quirky shorts during the swinging '60s. One was Kitchen, a film now unavailable for viewing. Gob Squad, a group of experimental performance artists, reimagines the scene and tries to recreate the Warhol cinematic experience at the ICA Jan. 13–15.

Carnage ★★★★ Sublime. Roman Polanski's dyspeptic adaptation of Yasmina Reza's Tony Award–winning God of Carnage traps two aging yuppie couples in an upscale Brooklyn apartment, then watches all pretense of civilized behavior gradually disintegrate. Their kids have gotten into a scuffle at recess, so the school demands that these parents meet to talk out the punishment. Passive-aggressive sniping abounds, until finally the Scotch comes out and all bets are off. Jodie Foster embodies a brittle limousine liberal until finally falling to pieces at the provocations of her lummox husband, John C. Reilly. Kate Winslet boozes around in pearls as a prissy mom fed up with her career-obsessed partner (Inglourious Basterds' Christoph Waltz, who never stops talking on his cell phone). Polanski's offhandedly elegant compositions map the ebbs and flows of this battle royale, all within the confines of one living room. Side-splittingly funny, it's like Edward Albee and Luis Buñuel got stuck in an elevator together. Carnage feels like a microcosm of both everything that matters and nothing of any consequence whatsoever. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

The Descendants ★★★ Despite never quite buying him as a cuckold, I enjoyed George Clooney's rumpled everyman turn in Alexander Payne's latest feature, adapted from Kaui Hart Hemmings' 2007 novel. When his cheating wife is critically injured in a boating accident during the opening credits, Clooney needs to step up and take charge of his family for the first time. The Descendants' plotless middle hour is particularly fantastic. Shailene Woodley's coltish awkwardness plays to the hesitation present in Clooney's relationship with his teen daughters, and Payne has a knack for letting scenes breathe and allowing his characters to surprise us. The central action in this very funny and often quite sad movie is Clooney stepping back and reevaluating everything and everybody he once took for granted. It feels like a transitional film for Payne, who has lost his young-man pitilessness and here reaches for a more accepting tone. It grows on you. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

The Girl With the Dragon Tattoo ★★ Proving that if you put a silk hat on a pig, it's still a pig, super-producer Scott Rudin corralled a frightening amount of talent for a newfangled Xerox of Stieg Larsson's best-selling phenomenon, which was already dragged out into a trifecta of Swedish movies just a couple years ago. Better acting, better cinematography, but in the end it's still just a rapey episode of Cold Case. Daniel Craig stars as the disgraced journalist roped into solving a 40-year-old murder on a remote island. Rooney Mara mesmerizes as the iconic Lisbeth Salander, a feral, wounded abuse victim with Goth superhero powers, once again trapped within a story sadly content to abandon her on the sidelines. Director David Fincher attempts to infuse this airport novel with the gravitas of his triumphant Zodiac by dwelling on the minutiae of the investigative process at comically absurd length. Save for Mara's searing performance, there's nothing new here. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Hugo ★★★★ Leave it to Martin Scorsese to direct a children's adventure about the importance of film preservation. Working from Brian Selznick's book, The Invention of Hugo Cabret, this miracle of a movie follows the title orphan (Asa Butterfield) as he hides out in a Parisian train station in the 1930s, winding the clocks and dodging a pratfall-riddled rent-a-cop (Sacha Baron Cohen). Meanwhile, a grumpy shopkeeper (Ben Kingsley) just might have a secret of his own. Hugo takes a sharp turn into a voluptuously helmed cinema history lesson that should be taught in schools. Scorsese employs cutting-edge digital 3-D technologies for this love letter to forgotten films, embracing the exploratory spirit of the medium's original pioneers. Hugo reminded me why I fell in love with movies in the first place. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

J. Edgar ★ ½ The worst thing about having heroes is that they always let you down. In many ways, J. Edgar Hoover is the classic Clint Eastwood character we've been watching since before Dirty Harry—a principled fellow who lets his workaholic tendencies and private codes destroy his personal life, until moral gray areas blur into darkness. Except this film feels like a school play. Swathed in horrible old-age makeup for the majority of J. Edgar's running time, Leonardo DiCaprio rants and raves to a collection of biographers, providing lazy narration where none is required. This closeted, ham-fisted Hoover is a chore to spend time with

TIN PANNED

The classic comic stumbles on screen.

The Adventures of Tintin ★★
Starring Jamie Bell, Andy Serkis, Daniel Craig, Simon Pegg and Nick Frost. Based on the comic books by Hergé. Screenplay by Steven Moffat, Edgar Wright and Joe Cornish. Directed by Steven Spielberg.

EVERYBODY'S GOT THEIR own aesthetic blind spots, even film critics who pretend to be above such things. I should probably just admit up front that motion-capture animation freaks me out.

Pioneered mainly by director Robert Zemeckis (who has since sworn off making live action films altogether), mocap basically means that actors stand in front of green-screens with a ton of sci-fi nodules attached to their faces, recording a performance that will later be digitized and manipulated into whatever the CGI department decides upon when rendering the film's cartoon vistas.

Call me old-fashioned, but I don't get why anybody would do this. If you want to make a cartoon, hire some voice actors and artists. If you want to photograph actors and make a movie, you should probably just photograph actors and make a movie. The entire technology strikes me as a dead zone—somewhere in between photography and animation, combining the worst elements of both.

Woody in Toy Story is Tom Hanks' greatest performance this side of Bachelor Party, and he did it all in a recording booth. Now compare that to the dead-eyed Zombie Hanks wandering around Zemeckis' The Polar Express.

I just don't like how it looks. All these people appear to be trapped halfway between being human and being cartoons, with soft fuzzy edges to boot. My friend and colleague Matt Zoller Seitz once compared this entire process to "driving around the block backwards to get to the house next door."

I guess I just expected more from Steven Spielberg. A legendary old-schooler who's among the last American directors to still edit films on pre-digital celluloid, Spielberg has vowed openly and vehemently in the press that he will never, ever shoot a movie on video. But apparently even Uncle Steven couldn't resist the siren call of digital 3-D, teaming up with producer Peter Jackson for a proposed trilogy based on the old comic strips by a Belgian named Hergé.

Mostly unknown in the U.S., The Adventures of Tintin follows a quick-witted boy reporter through a bevy of convoluted treasure hunts. Employing his protégé Zemeckis' mocap techniques, Spielberg is finally free from the limits of actual physical space, which is understandably appealing for certain control-freak directors. Your camera can now be anywhere, no longer beholden to pesky stuff like cuts, weather or gravity.

As far as urgency goes, this isn't exactly a quest comparable to keeping the Ark of the Covenant away from the Nazis.

Working from a paper-thin script by Edgar Wright, Joe Cornish and Dr. Who scribe Steven Moffat, Spielberg's Tintin takes off in a hurry, with our determinedly blank title character buying a toy ship that contains the first of three scrolls that'll lead to a treasure and... zzzzzzzzzz.

The first, and foremost problem is that there's nothing really at stake. Tintin (blandly "acted" by Jamie Bell) finds himself stuck with a tiresome alcoholic ship captain (mocap superstar Andy Serkis) as the two endeavor to keep untold treasures from falling into the hands of a dastardly pirate's descendant (Daniel Craig), who already has ample resources with which to conduct his quest for gold. They're basically risking life and limb to keep a rich dude from getting even richer. Sorry, but as far as urgency goes, this isn't exactly a quest comparable to keeping the Ark of the Covenant away from the Nazis.

The Adventures of Tintin has its share of visual marvels. Most astonishing is a motorcycle chase through a crowded village that compounds Spielberg's characteristic slapstick fun with physics to the point of absurdity and beyond. It's conducted in one sweeping motion without a single cut, and is rife with sound effects and music lifted straight from Raiders, but the playful elation fades almost immediately afterward.

Tintin himself is an awfully flat character—and even if I was amused by how Serkis' besotted sea captain consumes whiskey the way Popeye consumes spinach—it's a fallacy that you can remember what you knew when you were blackout drunk just by getting wasted again. I've been disproving this theory on an almost weekly basis since my senior prom.

But I think the main problem with The Adventures of Tintin, and with mocap technology in general, is that once everything is possible, nothing is amazing anymore. Not a single one of Spielberg's epic action sequences delivered one-tenth of the elation I felt watching actual stuntmen (or one seriously crazy movie star) performing actual death-defying feats in Mission: Impossible—Ghost Protocol.

Tricks are more exhilarating when you can't see the safety net, and sometimes movies need real people to have real personality. ✖✖✖

(as his real life counterpart probably was), and I endured most of J. Edgar just wishing to get away from him. There's no outside perspective, no relief from his drama queen shenanigans. It's a deeply silly movie; American history as kitsch, played out like a drag show. (In the suburbs.)

Jack and Jill NO STARS Isn't this exactly the kind of movie Adam Sandler was ragging on in Funny People? Apparently there's nothing more amusing than a comedian in a fat suit and a dress, but Sandler's venture into Big Momma's House territory is appalling, even by the half-assed standards of Happy Madison productions. Horribly directed by Dennis Dugan, Jack and Jill finds Sandler starring as both a successful commercial director and his bovine twin sister, a woman who leaves sweat stains on the bed when she sleeps and speaks in a grating sketch-comedy voice. Somewhere in the midst of all this arrives Al Pacino, playing himself as a lonely horndog with the hots for Sandler in drag. Hoo-ha-ing his way into grotesque self-parody, Pacino must've gotten jealous when he saw Bobby DeNiro's Fockers paychecks. The movie stops dead in its tracks so Michael Corleone can rap a commercial for Dunkin' Donuts. It's the worst Adam Sandler picture yet, and that's saying something. (In the suburbs.)

Martha Marcy May Marlene ★★★★ The title is a mouthful, but that's kind of the point. Writer/director Sean Durkin's astonishing debut is all about a loss of identity and the slippery slope between the past and the present. It's impossible to know what in this film is just a dream, or, more likely, a nightmare. Played by Elizabeth Olsen (yes, kid sister to those odious twins), Martha is first glimpsed fleeing from a cult compound deep in the deceptively soothing woods of the Catskills. She makes a panicked phone call to her estranged sister Lucy (Sarah Paulson), but right away we can tell that something isn't right. In the style of vintage Polanski, Durkin's confident film uses long takes and tension within compositions to conjure a consuming sense of unease. There's something off about the camera angles and the space between these characters. We're left stranded between identities, trapped in the tragic limbo of a doomed girl with too many names and no idea what any of them stand for. (In the suburbs.)

Melancholia ★★★★ There's a massive planet on a collision course with Earth, but knowing writer/director Lars Von Trier, we're probably more interested in its metaphorical implications. Kirsten Dunst stars as the less-interesting bipolar sister born into a family of privilege, rapid-cycling her way through one of the worst weddings ever captured on film. Granted, she never had a chance to begin with, as her mom (Charlotte Rampling) is going quietly nuts in the guest bedroom while papa (John Hurt) wrestles around with double dates. Family and friends self-destruct in blackly comic fashion throughout the shenanigans, and Dunst's Justine becomes a punishing sociopath. Full disclosure: I spent the better (and worst) parts of last year in a relationship with somebody I loved who suffered from a similar disorder. Melancholia scorched me to my core and left me unable to speak for an hour afterwards. Has there ever been a better metaphor for depression than a gigantic dark planet bearing down on you from the cosmos? (At Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Ghost Story

Getting the Job Done

Paula Patton and Tom Cruise flaunt impressive stunt skills in Mission: Impossible—Ghost Protocol.

Mission: Impossible—Ghost Protocol ★★★ This franchise has always been a director's demo reel in which diverse talents take turns showing off all the different ways they can film their star/producer sprinting. It's a delivery system for action set-pieces, but Brad Bird's fourth installment has some doozies, including the greatest stunt sequence I've seen in years. The brilliant animator behind The Incredibles makes his live-action debut with an astonishing facility for conveying information in bold visual flourishes. What makes Ghost Protocol special is Bird's knack for spinning our bickering crew from one absurdly dangerous situation to another with a spatial cause and effect logic worthy of Looney Tunes. A portion of the film was shot in IMAX, and for once, it's worth the extra bucks just to see how Bird and cinematographer Robert Elswit work this film's instantly classic skyscraper centerpiece, which I watched through splayed fingers and can't wait to see again. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Muppets ★★★ ½ Gloriously retro from start to finish, this proudly 2-D movie eschews computer animation in favor of felt puppets and embraces the vaudeville ethos of Jim Henson's original TV program, in which silliness and sweetness go hand in hand. Credit writer/co-star Jason Segel, a Judd Apatow mainstay who cashed in his clout from the raunchy hit Forgetting Sarah Marshall for a chance to bring his old heroes back to the big screen. It's a classic "getting the band back together" routine combined with a "Hey, let's put on a show!" narrative that reintroduces our beloved characters in witty and surprising ways. Segel and company get the effervescent spirit so right it's easy to forgive a few trivial missteps. For starters, there's a bit too much to-do over the film's human love story, which bogs down the otherwise bouncy proceedings. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

My Week With Marilyn ★★ Simon Curtis' adaptation of Colin Clark's suspect memoir is a great big slab of fan-fiction—a film that follows the template of 2008's Me and Orson Welles as a banal wish-fulfillment fantasy for movie buffs. Charmless Eddie Redmayne plays Clark, an idealist with silver-screen dreams, working a thankless job on Sir Laurence Olivier's The Prince and the Showgirl. Olivier, played with what looks like a prosthetic chin by Kenneth Branagh, cast American bombshell Marilyn Monroe as his costar, assuming he'd get to sleep with her. Michelle Williams, an actress apparently incapable of giving a bad performance, is the picture's lone saving grace. The Monroe va-va-voom is very clearly just another one of Norma Jean's costume changes, and the real pleasure of Williams' work is watching her flip her sex-kitten routine on and off like a light switch. One can't help wondering what a serious movie about Marilyn Monroe might've been like with the fearless Williams in the role, but this is little more than the masturbatory fancies of Redmayne's nonentity. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Shame ★★★★ Director Steve McQueen (no, not that one) follows up Hunger, his despairing Bobby Sands biopic, with an unsettling depiction of sex addiction in Manhattan. Michael Fassbender delivers the year's most fearless performance as Brandon, a successful yuppie who buries himself in an oblivion of empty hookups, seedy clubs, prostitutes and porn. When Brandon's trainwreck of a sister (Carey Mulligan) arrives needing a place to crash, their frayed family dynamic ruptures Brandon's self-imposed isolation. Short on dialogue and shot in minutes-long takes that leave the performers nowhere to hide, Shame is an exposed nerve. McQueen's vision of New York City is steely and unforgiving, all reflective surfaces and anonymity. Mulligan, too often confined to playing a kitten, is a revelation here, aching with carnal need. Look past all the sex and this is a horror movie about the loneliness and alienation imposed by modern life. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

Sherlock Holmes: A Game of Shadows ★ ½ I worry that Robert Downey Jr. is turning into Johnny Depp. Guy Ritchie's 2009's Sherlock Holmes will never be mistaken for a great movie, but it was clever, light on its feet and at least offered the winning spectacle of Downey and Jude Law bickering like a couple of old queens. The dude-ish, bare-knuckle-brawling Holmes upset most dedicated followers of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's original stories, but I could roll with the reinterpretation. Not so with this sorry sequel, which lands in theaters like a lump of Christmas coal. It's bigger and louder, and so much less involving. Holmes can't even be bothered to solve much in this non-mystery, as he and Watson spend most of their time running from explosions that drown out their bitchy banter. Eventually Jared Harris turns up as a sorely outmatched Professor Moriarty. Yawn. There's a deadness to Downey's delivery, hitting overfamiliar beats as if he's walking through a theme park instead of a movie. He might as well be playing Captain Jack Sparrow. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Skin I Live In ★★ ½ After floundering in recent years with sentimental Oscar bait, Pedro Almodóvar's cheerful return to perversity reunites him with his 1990s muse, Antonio Banderas. Here Banderas delivers a shocker of a performance as a vindictive plastic surgeon haunted by a laundry list of past tragedies that pile up in a telenovela fashion. Ingeniously employing a flashback structure that eliminates any possible critique without giving away the movie's most shocking secrets, it's only safe to reveal that Banderas' surgeon has been perfecting genetically engineered replacement skin with an unwilling human guinea pig locked in his elaborate home laboratory. There's some audacious messing with gender roles, and as usual, Almodóvar reels in a metric ton of winking classic film references, calling out everything from Franju's Eyes Without a Face to Hitchcock's Vertigo. The problem is the leaden pacing. Material this outré demands a dizzy, headlong pace, yet the director remains curiously detached and slowpokey. Twenty minutes tighter and this might've been something amazing. (At Coolidge Corner.)

Tinker Tailor Soldier Spy ★★ Let the Right One In director Tomas Alfredson's stagnant adaptation of John le Carré's spy novel revels in the source material's status as the anti-Bond thriller. Set in a 1973 rife with bad sideburns and unflattering eyeglasses, it's espionage full of ugly men toting manila folders and making insinuations in rooms so smoky that even the movie theater winds up with nicotine stains on its walls. Something very bad happened in Budapest, and Gary Oldman's George Smiley is eventually coaxed from retirement to ferret out a mole within the British secret service. Chockablock with great English character actors aching for a paycheck now that the Harry Potter series is over, Tinker Tailor fusses with a fractured time line, obscuring crucial information and priding itself on keeping the audience as far away from the plot as possible. This is an expertly mounted, enervating slog. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Tower Heist ★★ Brett Ratner's pandering Ocean's 11 knockoff stars Ben Stiller as a "working class" building manager for a luxury midtown Manhattan complex. Alan Alda plays a slimy, wannabe Bernie Madoff who has made off with the staff's pension funds in a Ponzi scheme. The only exciting thing about Tower Heist is that Eddie Murphy—playing a boyhood reprobate pal of Stiller's—actually seems to be trying again. (It's been a rough decade or two for us fans.) In full-on Billy Ray Valentine mode, Murphy lends these lugubrious proceedings a shot in the arm, constantly hinting at a filthier movie happening somewhere just outside the frame. Stiller's notorious ego is well represented, hogging most of the running time with his put-upon Queens drawl (he sounds like a parody of blue-collar Boston, dropping R's left and right). Brett Ratner continues to be the most anonymous filmmaker working today, with every cut and music cue arriving exactly where expected. Such a shame Murphy finally came back to play for such hackwork. (In the suburbs.)

The Twilight Saga: Breaking Dawn—Part One ★ Wait, what just happened? Sadly lacking the wherewithal to slog my way through Stephenie Meyer's subliterate phenomenon, this reviewer was unprepared for the gonzo plot turns of the series' final chapter, which has been cravenly split into two films for reasons of commercial calculation and severe artistic demerit. Having spent the past three movies begging to get banged by her sparkly vampire boyfriend, Edward (Robert Pattinson, acting with his hair again), Kristen Stewart's 18-year-old Bella is finally deflowered and impregnated in a thunderous anticlimax. I can't even begin to parse all the creepy anti-sex, body-horror, abortion debate issues bubbling around the ugly subtext, as I was too distracted by the gang of wolves having a psychic strategy discussion just outside the birth chamber. It looked like an

He's Back

Savings Time Given Arnold Schwarzenegger's recent bouts with messy divorces and paternity tests, it's likely he'd want to travel back to a simpler time. Like the '80s, when he was a big-screen superstar known for his outrageous biceps and accent. In James Cameron's The Terminator, he does just that. The throwback classic shows how he became famous enough to be a governator in the first place, and it's nearly kitschy enough to make you forget about his sloppy love life. See it at the Coolidge Corner Theatre as part of the @fter Midnite series Jan. 6–7.

Kathleen Godbold

outtake from Up. (I may or may not have shouted "Squirrel!" in a crowded theater.) And all that was before the toothy vampire episiotomy. Then a werewolf falls in love with a baby. People really read this garbage? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

War Horse ★★★ The schmaltziest movie of the year, War Horse is just Steven Spielberg doing what Steven Spielberg does. Even if that ain't your thing, there's still no denying that he's the most gifted craftsman of his generation. Based on Michael Morpurgo's 1982 children's book—recently adapted into a smash Broadway play by Nick Stafford—it arrives etched in the simple, bold strokes of a passed-down fable. Newcomer Jeremy Irvine (a lantern-jawed hunk who looks like Christopher Reeve perpetually on the verge of tears) trains the title mount, a magnificent creature we follow through a long procession of various owners and occasionally harrowing vignettes. Folks in impossibly ugly situations rise to the occasion by reaching out to one another with simple acts of kindness, more often than not inspired by this strangely magnetic horse. Of course, it's corny. This is a Disney movie directed by Steven Spielberg. Resistance is futile. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Young Adult ★ Written by Diablo Cody, who won an Oscar for coming up with Juno's obnoxious catchphrases, Young Adult feels like it was made to settle some old scores. Charlize Theron stars as a drunken divorcée ghostwriting the final installment in a canceled series of insipid tween novels. Wildly misinterpreting an e-mailed birth announcement from her high school flame (Patrick Wilson), she heads back to her hometown to break up his marriage. On one hand, the film is a mean-spirited revenge fantasy, in which the girl who was more popular than you in high school arrives home 20 years later as a failed shrew. Director Jason Reitman wallows in agonizingly long scenes of her public humiliation, while Theron's fearlessly grating performance asks for no audience empathy whatsoever. On the other hand, we must suffer the movie's septic condescension toward small-town life. Cody and Reitman appear to be primarily interested in making cheap jokes at the expense of anybody who isn't lucky enough to be Diablo Cody or Jason Reitman. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

FEW BANDS ARE MORE aptly named than O'Death, which adopted the title of an Appalachian dirge, one most often associated with bluegrass statesman Ralph Stanley's 2002 Grammy-winning rendition.

"Death and dark subject matter has been a source of inspiration for us for a long time," says singer/guitarist Greg Jamie, 29. "Some of our stuff's pretty downbeat, but I think a lot of spiritual music addresses dark things."

It was actually a Charley Patton version of "Oh Death" that clicked for the Brooklyn-based gothic Americana band. Jamie heard a rendition on John Fahey's Revenant label, where 1920s country-blues pioneers like Patton and Dock Boggs shared space with gutbucket gospel and free jazz under the banner of "Raw music of all stripes."

"That early stuff was raw and strange," Jamie says. "It doesn't translate to the progression of folk music exactly, because it's harsh. And that's what we were excited about."

The eight-year-old group embraced that harshness early, as members delightedly flogged their instruments, breaking country-folk conventions with aggressive elements of punk, metal, grunge and jazz. Fiddler Bob Pycior filled empty space like a dervish, while ex-guitarist Gabe Darling coaxed skewed textures from ukulele and banjo.

"We didn't want to be restricted by any expectations with that instrumentation," says Jamie, the center of the storm on acoustic guitar. "[Darling] follows riff patterns that have nothing to do with any sort of runs or approaches to banjo. That's true of all of us to some extent. We're just trying to make the sound we want to make with what we have."

For emphatic drummer David Rogers-Berry, that included using a metal bucket as part of his kit, something else to smash in tandem with electric bassist Jesse Newman's bouncy thrust.

> "Death and dark subject matter has been a source of inspiration for us for a long time."

However, all the experimental discord came to a halt in 2009 when a cancer diagnosis led Rogers-Berry to chemotherapy and a shoulder replacement. He returned to action at the 2010 Newport Folk Festival. "That was a huge deal for us," Jamie says of that show, booked during the drummer's treatment. "We had to take it and hope he'd be ready."

Rogers-Berry nailed the comeback, even if it saw him temper his attack. "He doesn't lift over his head as much, but you don't really have to do that," Jamie says. "He has a lot of ideas, and I don't think that's changed at all."

In fact, all the members of O'Death refined their ideas on Outside, the group's third album. There, the band stripped to impressionistic essentials, starting with the hushed indie-folk of "Bugs," where Jamie sings, "I've been wasting most my time, waiting for the day, when like bugs we figure out, how to make life stay."

Even the clanging chantey "Alamar" haunts with more precisely arranged vocals and percussion. And "Pushing Out" slowly builds existential musing into waves of sepia-toned strings, playful wood blocks and reverberating drum beats.

"It's hard to define what you're listening to at points, which is kind of intentional," Jamie says from Maine, where he and his wife run the Biddeford music venue the Oak and the Ax.

Coming off the latest project's richer arrangements, O'Death drafted trombonist/percussionist Tris Palazzolo from the band Grandchildren to fill out its sound for tour dates, including a Jan. 22 stop at the Brighton Music Hall.

"It has more of an orchestral feel," Jamie says. "I don't think we're as theatrical as we used to be. Maybe it's more of a considered approach—and the music is definitely the most important thing. It suits the new material better."

In light of Rogers-Berry's ordeal, Jamie acknowledges the group's relationship to its name and dark subject has evolved. "There were points where we felt a little weird." But of the music, he says, "It's like a funeral march, kind of a celebration of life." ✖✖✖

Of a Different Stripe

Stare Masters While 2012 promises smarter phones, thinner laptops and even more Nicki Minaj, 1965 was still a very good vintage. Between the Beatles, 31-cent gas and gam-flashing miniskirts, there's a lot to be nostalgic about. In Boston, no group crystallizes the era better than hometown boys the Remains. With a style often compared to the Rolling Stones, the group developed a cult following with an edgy yet cohesive sound. They bring a distinctly '60s groove to Brighton Music Hall on Jan. 13.

Hanging Out

En Pointillism Leaping through frames, twirling on canvas or dangling from clotheslines as performance sculpture—as in Trisha Brown Dance Company's pictured Floor of the Forest—dancers have taken over the Institute of Contemporary Art. Dance/Draw, the museum's latest exhibit, connects illustrative art with physical movement, and follows 40 years of dramatic change for both fields. From photographs of tribal dances to graphite works made from pointe shoes, Dance/Draw bridges the two disciplines. See this artistic duet on the waterfront through Jan. 16.

Bitchin' Billionaires

Frankly Speaking In his new book, cultural historian and journalist Thomas Frank explains what he sees as a topsy-turvy political paradox: how conservatives managed to turn America's recession into a pity party for the exorbitantly wealthy. Whether you're on Team One Percent or a member of the lower 99, Frank's appearance at the Brattle Theatre on Jan. 5 is sure to spark a lively Q&A session. Kathleen Godbold

Who says you need a sporting event to throw a killer tailgate party? In fact, the Ultimate Tailgate Party—a benefit for Lovin' Spoonfuls, held at the South Boston hot spot Sam's—was better than Harvard vs. Yale, Head of the Charles, a polo match at Myopia and the Patriots in the Super Bowl combined.

For one thing, the food was prepared by the likes of über chefs Asia Mei, Gabriel Frasca and Amanda Lydon (fresh from ACK), and Carla and Christine Pallotta. The booze, likewise, was superior and plentiful, and then there was the fact that the money raised went to getting perishable and uneaten food that would otherwise go to waste into soup kitchens and shelters.

Not surprisingly, the rowdy crowd was equally high-wattage, including the likes of real estate yummy mummy Beth Dickerson, architect and Bikram lookalike Ben Uyeda, the Karger twins with their respective beauty queens, international best-dressed restaurateur Esti Benson and her rock-star husband, Drew, broacasting bazillionaire Richie Balsbaugh, litmus tests of hipness Gina Fox, Marci Duarte and Chrystyna Kassaraba, and the organization's founder, brunette babe Ashley Stanley.

The partying took place under a big white tent between the restaurant and the water, the entertainment was nonstop, and the bathroom was up a slick set of stairs I almost slipped on, but that was probably the gin's fault more than anything.

Encapsulating things nicely, one guest said, "This is definitely the best party I've ever been to in a parking lot."

The Only Thing Missing Was Ricky Ricardo

By all accounts, the Havana Nights gala hosted by Spero to benefit Cradles to Crayons was a reasonable approximation of an upper-class debauch in Havana, circa 1955.

Held at the Artists for Humanity EpiCenter, the party had free-flowing rum, a sizzling DJ, a silent auction for high rollers and a cigar roller for stogie smokers.

On hand for the festivities were such junior jetsetters as Caroline Humphrey and her main squeeze, Chris Warren, Celtic wannabe Daisuke Yasutake, "Yes, as in the bridge" Josh Zakim, brunette bombshell Charlotte Lewis and her raven-haired cohort Melanie Platten, manly heartthrob Mike Morris, throbbing homo-sapien Joshua Janson, his long-suffering husband, Ben McGuire, the Champagne-sipping Curly Aldrich, the hale and hearty Richard Krupp, Pepsodent ad Tyler Summers, hipster hotelier Uzay Tumer, the stunning Meaghan Slater and TV personality Chris Talanian, to name a mere smattering.

Bridget O'Neil, Erin Incollingo, Victoria Papa and Eric Rains at Havana Nights

Brooke Bricen, Lillian Barrett and Brittany Bricen at Havana Nights

Richard, Judi and Douglas Krupp at Food for Thought

Joel Cutler, Chloe Tinagero, Jenny Flaumenhaft and Mallory and Randi Cutler at Food for Thought

The after-party at the Ames kept things sizzling until well after my bedtime, and hopefully a lot of people got rooms (nudge, nudge, wink, wink). I, for one, wish I had 10 bucks for every Panama hat someone lost that night.

Thinking on Your Feet

The holidays got a high-octane jump-start for anyone who attended the Food for Thought benefit for the Grow Clinic at Boston Medical Center.

Held at the Mandarin Oriental, the party began with cocktails and little nuggets of deliciousness so refined I can't begin to describe them, and continued with a sit-down dinner for 300-plus. Among them: the entire Cutler clan, pinup girls Pamela Vargas and Ashley Bickford with their other halves, flawless fashion plate Judi Krupp and her handsome husband, Douglas, hostess with the mostest Linda Matzkin and the incomparable Joe, the swanlike Mary Wolfson and Bob (Mr. Dunkin' Donuts) Rosenberg, the tastefully low-key Joan Belkin and her husband, Steve, catering mogul Neal Balkowitsch, the distinguished Donald Nelson and mistress of ceremonies Heather Unruh.

There wasn't a dry eye in the room during the speaking portion, but the evening was anything but a downer. As one guest put it: "This feels more like Thanksgiving than the actual day."

The evening's award for best recovery, meanwhile, goes to the broker who was making a trade during the cocktail hour and got busted by his wife.

"What?" he said, after hanging up the phone. "I'll give the money to the charity." ×××

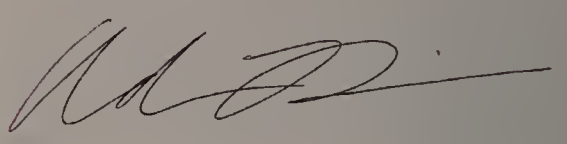
The IMPROPER



Through a Glass, Oddly

The other morning, at a preview of the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum's new wing, I looked down from the upper tier of the auditorium at the little figures of architectural journalists getting excited over acoustic paneling. The sight reminded me of a remark by pretentious Italian novelist Umberto Eco. He said that writing historical fiction is like watching a sporting event in an arena. Depending on where you sit, you'll have a completely different conception of what happened. Hence, your view of the Ice Girls' midriffs might be my view of the guy picking his nose on the Jumbotron.

The same relativity pertains to all human interactions, which we view through the windows of our individual psyches. Some people's windows are filled with tinted glass. Several people I know have mirrors in theirs. My own, I think, is equipped with a Venetian blind for selective blocking. Kyle Wright (who wrote the main feature in this issue) is so chipper that his psyche is probably decked with a festive bead curtain. Point is, everything you believe or feel—love, memories, opinion on whether the MBTA is actually run by the diabolical snake cult leader Thulsa Doom—is, to the person next to you, total bulls.

This applies to everything in life except bar food pairings, which are either right or wrong. You simply don't drink Burgundy with oysters. I mean, gross. In this issue, we match cocktails to dishes at some of the city's finer spots for propping up the bar.

Spring to Action

CREATION STORY

THE ADVANCEMENT OF ANY CRAFT requires failed experimentation. The first golden age of the cocktail saw the creation of shakers powered by hand crank and by bicycle. It was an era dominated by the Julep strainer, an inelegant, messy instrument incapable of adapting to different equipment.

"It was time for a spring strainer to be created," pronounces local bartending leader Jackson Cannon. And in 1892, a patent was assigned to Dennis Sullivan, owner of a "gentlemen's cafe" on Avery Street called the Hawthorne. "Within a short amount of time, it became a piece of equipment that never goes away," says Cannon, who now runs the Hawthorne in Kenmore Square. Basic to the point of primitivity, the strainer hasn't changed for more than 100 years. Adds Cannon, "Neither has ketchup." Like Occam's law of hospitality, the simplest solution is often the best.

About Face

Beef cheeks may not be the edgiest nose-to-tail items, but neither are they commonplace. Trends aside, the reason to dig into an order of tacos de cabeza is that cheeks are perhaps the tastiest, most tender cuts from the cow. At Taqueria el Amigo, Jorge Calderon's hideaway on the Waltham-Watertown line, the unctuous, velvety, lightly gamey meat is braised, browned and served on a double layer of steamed corn tortillas. Freshened up with chopped onion, cilantro, lime and a half-moon of avocado, one bite is enough to put a wide smile on your face.

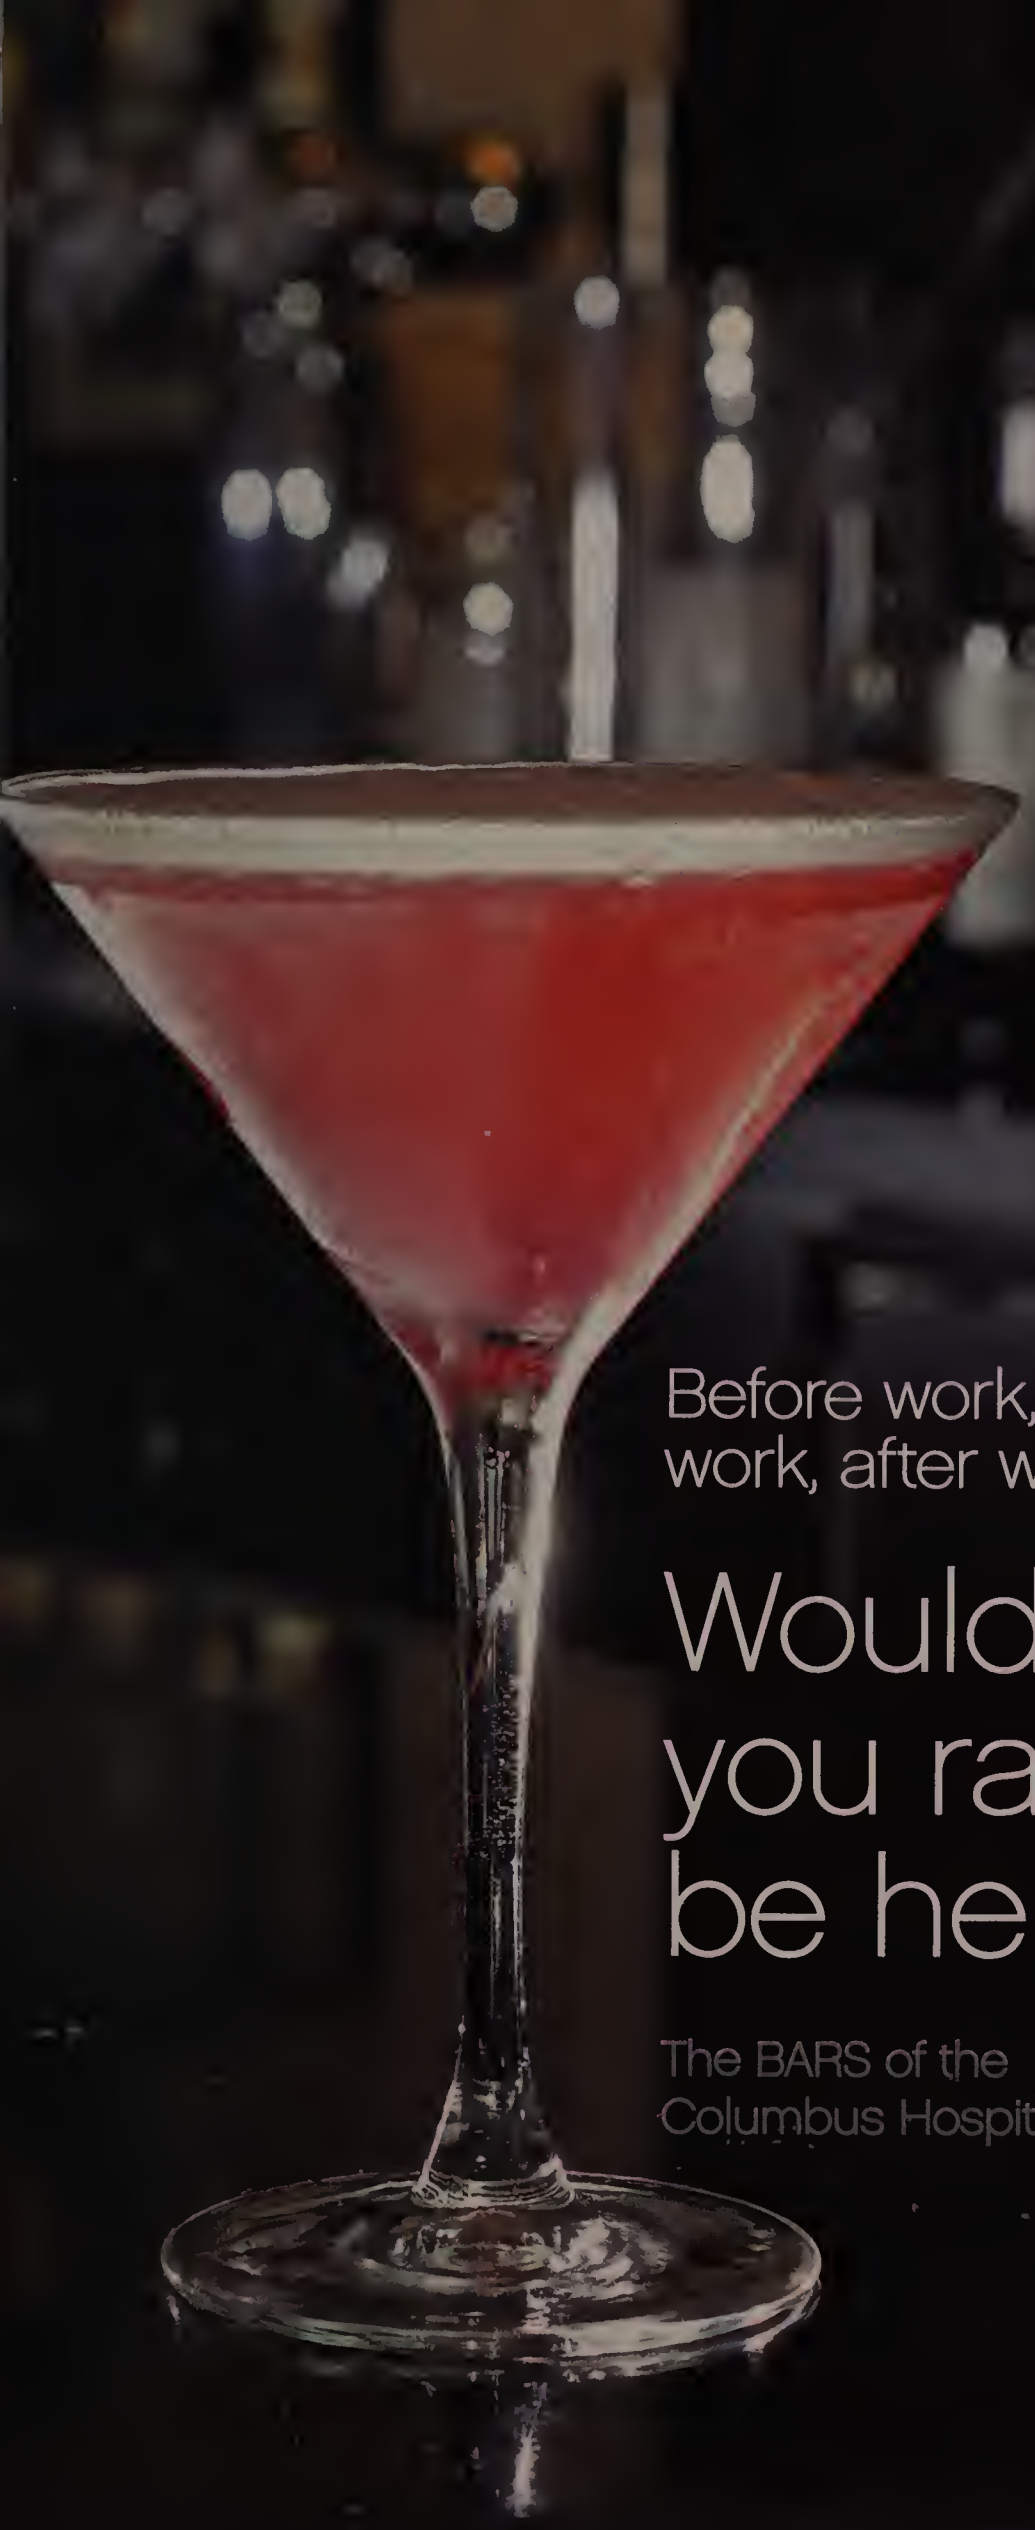
Beauty

The Winter of My Skin's Discontent

New England cold air hates New Englanders' faces; it dries us, chaps our lips and saps our radiance. Such was the litany of complaints I recently spat at two makeup artists, hoping for sympathy. Instead, they gave me pitying looks and asked if I'd been into Fresh lately.

Unlike most heads of beauty lines, Fresh co-owner Lev Glazman actually lives here, which means he knows New England weather. And he's originally from Russia, which means he knows cold.

Crème Ancienne Infusion, $90; Black Tea Instant Perfection Mask, $85; and Black Tea Age-Delay Face Serum, $80. All at Fresh, 121 Newbury St., Boston (617-421-1212) fresh.com.



"When we go from warm indoors to freezing outdoors all season, it dehydrates skin," he explains. "So for serious rehydration, you need Crème Ancienne Infusion." The line's newest entry, it relies on rosewater and lemon peel oil to seal in moisture and tone. "Then there's black tea," he says cryptically. "It's in our masks and serums containing kombucha extract." That, it seems, equals extremely hydrating antioxidants.

A day later in the Fresh boutique, the sales assistant eyes my new products and guesses my mission. "Do you want the new Sugar Lip Treatment, too?" she asks. "It's the absolute cure for dry lips." It moisturizes for up to 24 hours, she adds, thanks to orange extract and plum seed oil.

Tallying up the flavorful ingredients in my basket, one thing's certain: I may be cold this winter. But I certainly won't go hungry.

GLISTEN UP

"This place has great bones," restaurateur Ed Kane says, standing in the construction melee for his latest venture. Gem was once Kennedy's Midtown, but the bones are really the only thing his glitzy project will share with the shuttered Irish bar. Kane's Big Night Entertainment Group worked wonders on the old Bertucci's space last year, turning it into the sleek, if excessive, Red Lantern. Here, the space will be transformed from a stale steakhouse to a 1940s European setting. "It's a little bit English private dining club and a little bit French," says Kane. That means luxe fabrics like mohair and leather in rich chocolate and crimson hues.

Executive chef Kevin Long has a harder time finding a definition. "The menu is extremely diverse. There are a lot of different flavors—some French, a little Italian, a touch of Asian here and there," he says. "I'm really not the most excitable guy, but food-wise, this is one of the most eclectic projects I've seen."

When they open in early February, dishes like Wagyu hanger steak with shoestring potatoes ($38), miso-crusted sea bass ($29) and deconstructed salad Niçoise ($15) will be available in the 35-seat dining room or the cushy lounge. Long will make fine use of antique servingware sourced from shops around New England, like cut crystal trays for salumi and pickles ($15) or tiny copper pots for sauces.

IT'S A MORE GROWN-UP VERSION OF LUXURY.

Despite its glamour, Gem will be more subdued than Big Night Entertainment Group's other venues, like the showy Estate or the mini-empire Kane's developed inside the MGM Grand at Foxwoods. Interior designer John Stefanon will speckle the floor with a custom honey-colored mosaic to provide footing for sipping craft cocktails at the tufted banquettes in the bar area, while a hand-carved door opens onto the lounge. It's a more grown-up version of the luxury Big Night's patrons expect. One that'll likely carry over into Kane's newest project, an Asian-inspired restaurant on the Waterfront, set to launch later this year.

KYLE WRIGHT

Q&A

A STAND-UP GUY

Comedian, author and show host Adam Carolla will appear on the upcoming season of The Celebrity Apprentice. He'll be at the House of Blues on Jan. 20.

Why did you sign up for* The Celebrity Apprentice?
They called and they asked and I said, "OK." It was the same with Dancing With the Stars. Everyone always says, "I wanted to challenge myself" or "I've always been a big fan of Carrie Ann Inaba." That's not really how it works. They called my agent, and we talked about if it was a good move and what the hours would be like.

Do you think it's going to be more challenging than* Dancing With the Stars?
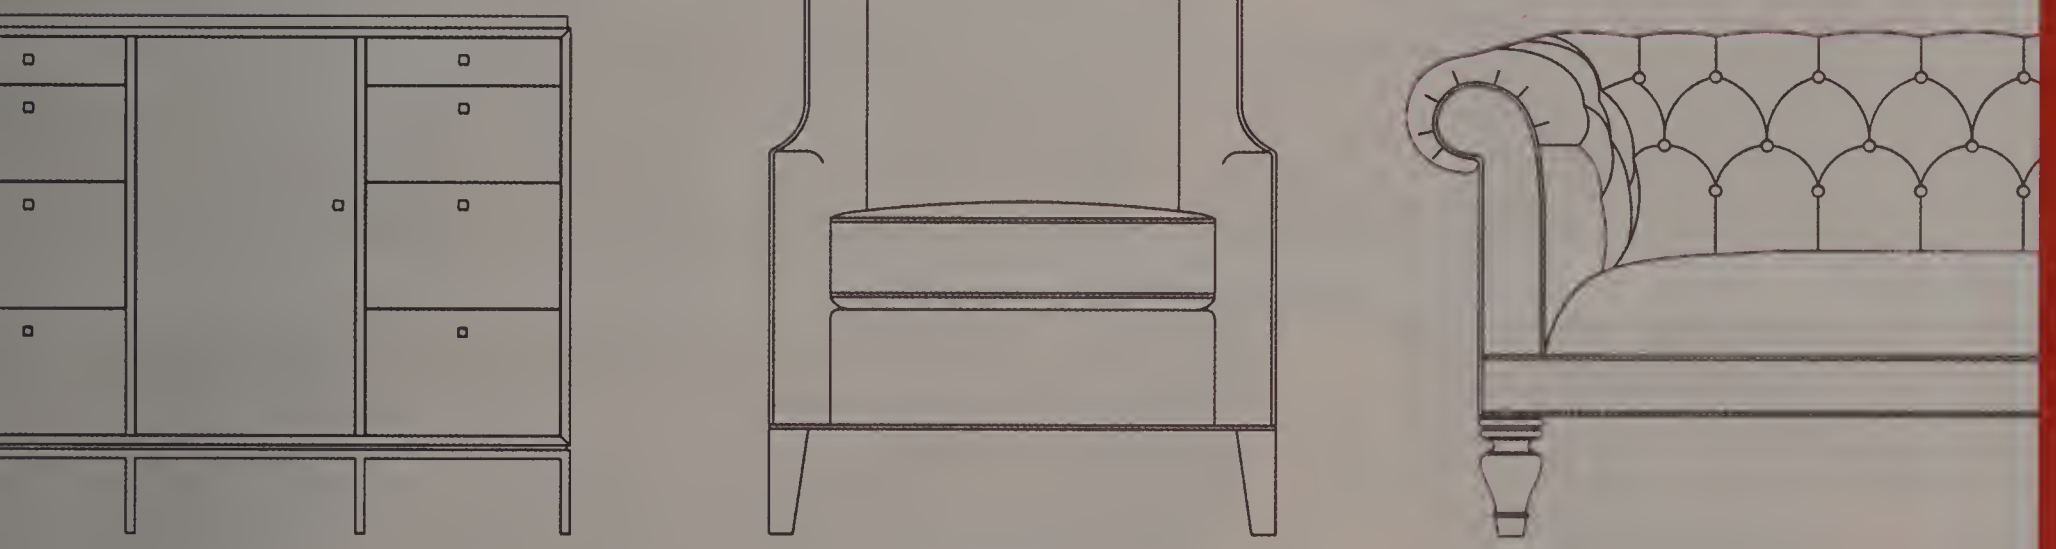
Nothing can match the pressure of Dancing With the Stars. Just being alone out on a stage, having them announce your name so you can make an ass out of yourself in front of 20 million people. Celebrity Apprentice is a grind. On Dancing, I practiced two or three hours a day and then went home. This is a 14-hour day, six days a week.

Are you sizing up the competition?
People think celebrities are soft and lazy. You think Penn Jillette got where Penn Jillette is today by being lazy and soft? You think Arsenio Hall got a late-night TV show because he didn't want to get out of bed? Or that Clay Aiken was runner-up on the biggest competition on the planet because he was lazy? It's quite the opposite. My family is lazy. Celebrities aren't lazy. They're super motivated.



How much of an impact does the venue have on your stand-up show?
Most comedians prefer a venue like the House of Blues because it's more intimate. But then there are other comedians who prefer to do one show for a thousand people instead of four shows for 250 people. It's a trade-off. You end up modifying your act to use less crowd work. It's less, "Hey you, where'd you get a hot dame like that?" Now I sound like I'm doing comedy in the '40s.

Ever see a random gay guy or a woman in your audience that you wouldn't expect to be there?
Well, you should know that to me, all gay men are random. There will always be one or two black guys who will say, "I'm your only black fan!" It's funny because you always think you'll get predominately straight white dudes who are in their 40s, but there are also a lot of chicks in their 40s. And then the guy-dude-bros. I think that Loveline and Dancing With the Stars bring out the ladies.

Are you surprised by the success of your podcast?
I'm surprised by how successful the podcast is, and by how successful my book was. But I'm also surprised when things fail. I had a home-improvement show that everybody loved. But no one watched it, so it got cancelled. TV Guide said we were the best home-improvement show on TV. It's a two-way street. KYLE WRIGHT

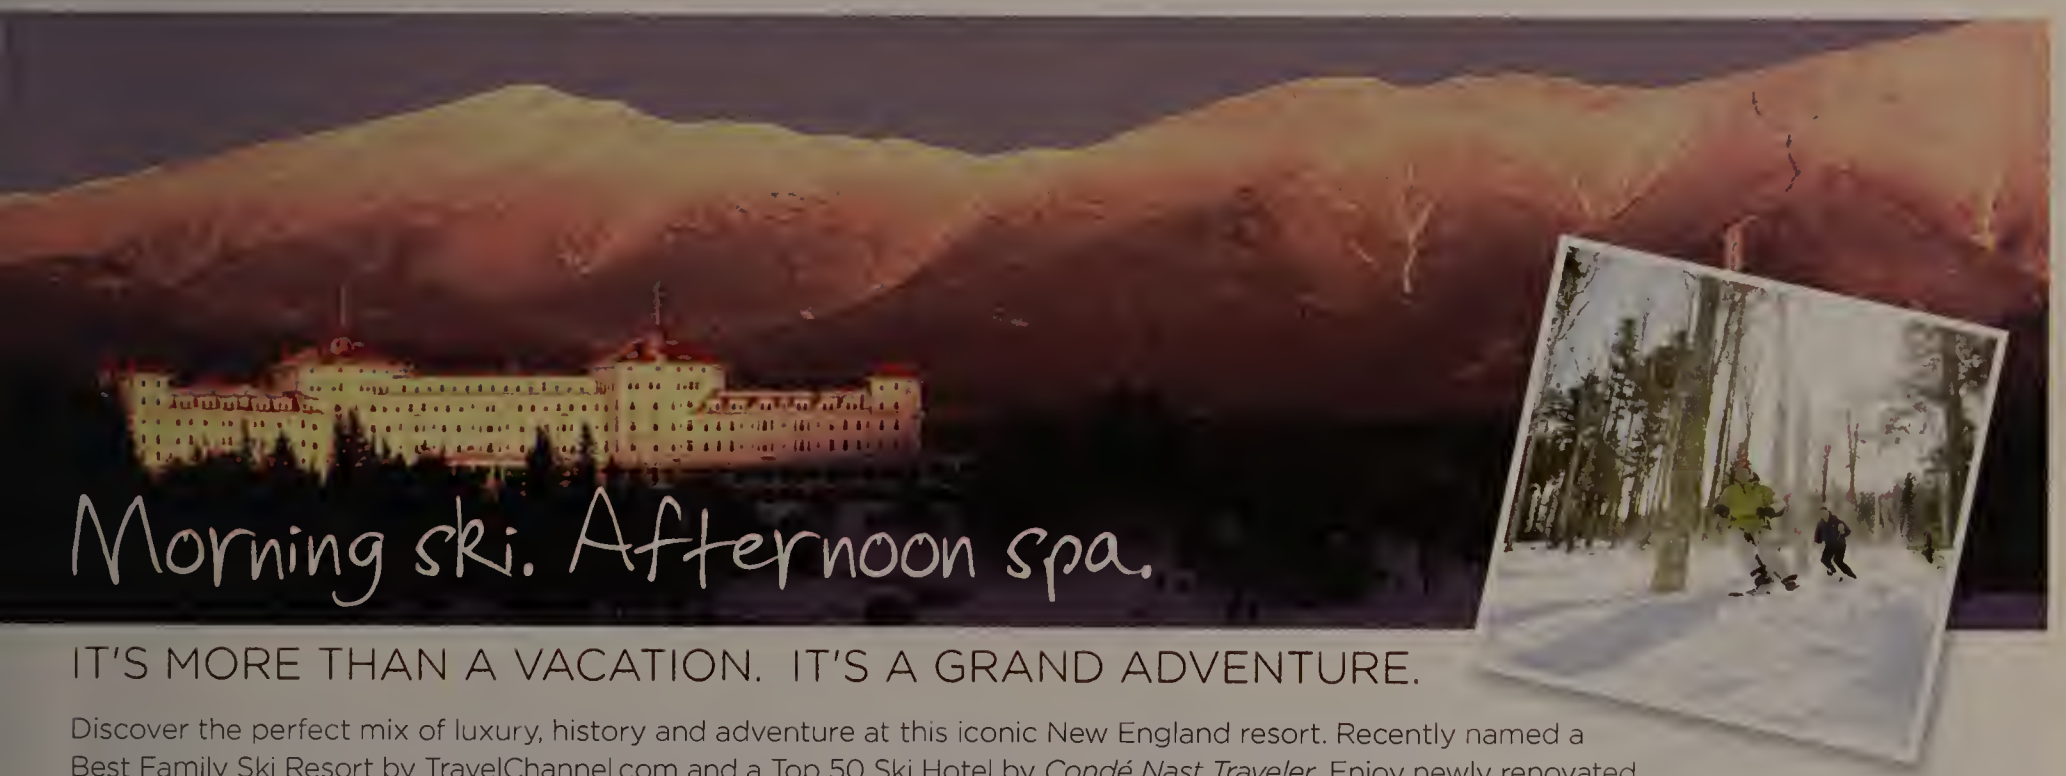
GOOD ENOUGH

The psychological importance of imperfection

HAPPINESS HAS BEEN identified as a psychological category, not unlike depression. Tal Ben-Shahar's perspective on contentment comes from recognizing that the source of his unhappiness was his perfectionism, which constrained him in too-tight armor.

Ben-Shahar's time as Israel's youngest-ever squash champion ended in injuries, but the experience launched his inquiry into the paradoxical flaws of perfectionism and the more fluid virtues of "Good-Enough Optimalism." He discusses the upside of accepting error and being open to trials, maybe many trials. By embracing imperfection, experimentation becomes possible, as does the ability to avoid the burden of black-or-white evaluation.



Being Happy
by Tal Ben-Shahar

Ben-Shahar formerly taught at Harvard.

In business, if you avoid admitting problems in the name of pinched-perfectionism, you can't fix them. Optimalism means admitting and working on failures. Ben-Shahar applies this dichotomy to psychology, detailing how opening oneself up to a realistic flow of feelings, good and bad, is a more authentic and useful practice than simply maintaining a Prozac'd stiff upper lip. Relationships, similarly, need to accept imperfection, and to value their ongoing, swooping rhythms. ✖✖✖

FROM PAGE 201: "Self-compassion includes being understanding and kind toward oneself, mindfully accepting painful thoughts and feelings and recognizing that one's difficult experiences are part of being human. It is also about being forgiving towards ourselves if we perform poorly on an exam, make a mistake at work, or get upset when we shouldn't."

Drink of the Moment

IN GOOD SPIRITS

NAME: A Bullet for Fredo.

PRICE: $10.

INGREDIENTS: Nardini Aquavite Grappa Riserva, Perucchi Vermouth Blanc, Campari.

WHERE TO FIND IT: Brick & Mortar (you know it as "the old Enormous Room").

WHY YOU'VE NEVER HEARD OF THE PLACE: It lacks a phone number, website or a sign.

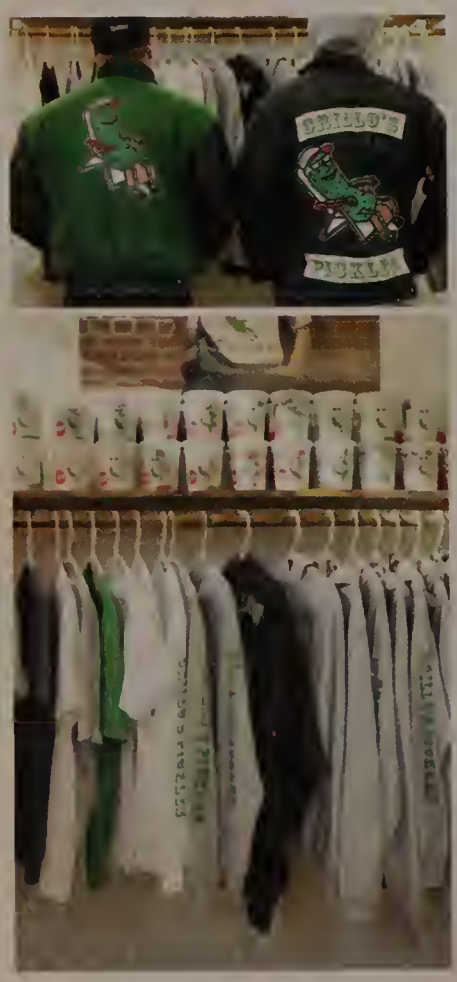
ROLE IN THE FAMILY BUSINESS: Consigliere (direct, restrained, more potent than it first appears).

YOU'LL LIKE IT IF: You're a fan of brandy or Cognac and are apt to enjoy a bitter cocktail with a rich mouthfeel.

SPECIAL TECHNIQUES: The drink is premade in batches then placed in the freezer, so customers get an ice-cold, perfectly mixed cocktail with no waiting time.

MASTERMINDS: Mixology aces Misty Kalkofen (last at Drink) and Evan Harrison (formerly of Deep Ellum).

CROWD: Expect to see a friendly bunch of industry folks. Rather than officially opening, the team began inviting friends night after night. A chummy, communal vibe infuses the space, from the arched copper bar to the high-top seating.



JUST WHEN YOU THINK YOU'RE OUT, THEY PULL YOU BACK IN: Brick & Mortar opens at 5 pm, seven nights a week.

While working to meet wholesale orders and scrambling to open his first storefront, Travis Grillo couldn't resist the pun: "I've gotten myself into a pickle." His business began in 2008, with Grillo selling pickles from the back of a Cutlass Supreme. At his new pop-up in Inman Square, he now offers a lengthy product list: everything from cukes and carrots to minty red grapes and cinnamon-laced beets. TO MY POTENTIAL LUNCHTIME LOVER: I haven't known you long, but you fascinate me. I'm inspired by sitting near you at lunch—and it's happened more than once. We like some of the same things and share some of the same views. I wish I were outgoing enough to just ask you out! But beneath this fun-loving facade, I'm afraid. I hope we can figure this out.

Crushing big-time

In Reply to "A Lesson in Office Politics":

Your shallow attempt to insult your coworker's superior vocabulary and experience reeks of jealousy. You obviously can't compete with her success. Rather than expending your energy hating her and convincing your fellow underachievers to hate her, try accomplishing just half of what she has accomplished. Your coworker isn't the one who has to worry about karma. Mean girls always fail.

You've said enough

To a neighborly driver:

While looking for a parking spot on Boylston Street, I saw you and your wife getting into your car. I was excited to nab the space, as I was running to a business lunch. As you approached my car, I assumed you were going to tell me that you weren't leaving, but you surprised me by offering me a parking sticker that still had 40 minutes left!

Very grateful

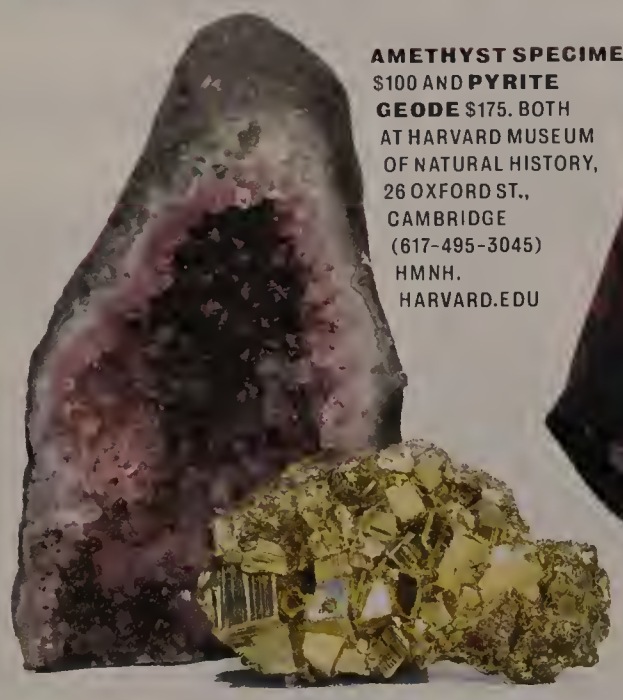
Cab for Less Cash

We have our flirtations with syrah and pinot noir, but true red-wine fanatics always return to cabernet sauvignon. Problems arise with the twin demons of overpricing and commoditization, meaning there are many cabs with excessive ego—wines we discovered and loved but now don't drink because of their cost. And there's an ocean of tasteless junk out there—those with the right label but no soul. Not to despair: You may have to hunt, but there are always bargains to be found. Here are three of the best.

Marques de Casa Concha Cabernet Sauvignon PUENTE ALTO, CHILE, 2009 ($20, BAUER WINE & SPIRITS) Chile can't be beat when it comes to everyday reds, and if you step up to this price level, the quality is extraordinary. Casa Concha is a name you can always trust. This wine is brimming with ripe blueberry and black cherry flavors that are accented with coffee and licorice. Medium in tannin, it's got enough kick to warm you up on those cold winter evenings, or even early afternoons.

McManis Family Cabernet Sauvignon NORTHERN CALIFORNIA, 2010 ($13, UPPER FALLS WINE) This winery is a consistent winner. Cabernet at this price too often tastes herbal, floral and almost cranberry-like. McManis is able to craft a smoky, chocolatey, black plum–flavored wine with some richness and spice and a long satisfying finish.



Buehler Cabernet Sauvignon NAPA VALLEY, 2009 ($22, BAUER WINE & SPIRITS) Napa may be Cabernet Central in the U.S., but it's beginning to price itself out of the everyday drinking category, with most bottles north of $40. Buehler has stood out in this aristocratic field for its sensible dollar tag and solid quality, but the 2009 is something special. Lush and powerful with massive blackberry flavors, it pairs beautifully with hearty meat dishes.

PEAK SEASON

Location and luxury are the draws at the Omni Mount Washington Resort.

RED ROOF INN The Mount Washington Hotel, a massive structure with an imposing backdrop.

GAZING AT A MOUNTAIN, never mind a range of them as Olympian as New Hampshire's Presidentials, can feel unnatural. Where the sky ought to be, you get geology—not to mention its attendant maples, snowmobiles and, of course, condo developments. So when mountains fill your windshield as you drive two and a half hours up I-93 through Franconia Notch, you get a sense of being far removed from the honking reality of Mass. Ave. Then, once you've passed the low-slung squalor of roadside motels and pancake joints, you look to the left and, nailed against the slopes like a Disney background, roosts a white Spanish Renaissance palace. This is the Omni Mount Washington Hotel, a century-old ski retreat that combines Gilded Age grace with a world-class spa. And zip-lining.

✓ Traveler's Checks

Men should bring a jacket, since the Dining Room requires proper dress during dinner hours.

If B&B is more your style, book a room at the Omni Bretton Arms Inn, located down the driveway, next to the stables.

Stepping into the hotel's Great Hall, a giant fieldstone fireplace makes its crowning moosehead look decorous and understated. Tiffany glass, intricate moldings—this is architectural grandeur on a European scale. Carpets sport woven images of local flora (buttercup, sandwort) and the tracks of neighborhood mammals (bear, fox, human being), while paintings of Mount Lafayette and the Old Man of the Mountain further ground the decor in the landscape. But despite the pillars and the crystal (and an off-lying room where you can host a meeting at the same table on which economists and world leaders created the IMF and World Bank in 1944), it's cozy. Cocoa-and-pajamas cozy, as is evident from the families lolling all over the furniture.

The resort tries hard to establish a sense of place, down to the mountain herbs in the afternoon tea. It achieves this surprisingly well in the spa, which, after the hotel's recent $50 million renovation, rivals the most polished ones on Newbury Street.

VIEW WITH A ROOM The Great Hall

Instead of aping the usual Asian-lite aesthetic, the spa feels pointedly New England. Wallpaper is muted, in natural tones, and paintings of regional flowers hang above stuffed armchairs that might've graduated from an upscale country inn. A couples' lounge makes a tranquil spot to drink Champagne with a view of the mountains, which provide ingredients like nettle and candytuft for the spa's line of herbal products. After a morning spent disjointing yourself on the piste, a steam and a merciless deep-tissue massage trump any glass of brandy.

Since the resort's philosophy is that you can, actually, be all things to all people, non-skiers can busy themselves with zip-lining, sleigh rides, dogsledding and an outdoor, heated pool for a foggy winter swim. Lazier visitors can distract themselves in the resort's new wine bar, the Princess Room, while the downstairs nightclub, the Cave, dates back to Prohibition days as a former speakeasy. If you have the time and budget, skip Stickneys, a solid pub and steak house on the lower level, in favor of the Dining Room. Equal to the scale of the Great Hall and capped with a glass rotunda, it's the sort of place where Edith Wharton might've ordered canards à la rouennaise. Today's guests have more modern options like lobster stir-fry with soba noodles or root vegetable and gnocchi stew.

And, of course, whenever you look out the window, there's a view worth savoring. Mount Washington is, after all, about the sense of place. ✖✖✖

SKILL POSITION

The Ritz steps up its game.

Artisan Bistro
10 Avery St., Boston
(617-574-7176)

ARTIST RENDERING While you can't go wrong with the classics, start with a lobster pizza.

UNDERSTANDING THE promise implied in the name of the Ritz Carlton's new restaurant requires two flips through the dictionary. An artisan is defined as a craftsman, and a craftsman is one who creates or performs with skill and dexterity. It took just one visit to the space once comically labeled Jer-Ne to lead me to conclude that Artisan Bistro is aptly named. (Two follow-up visits confirmed that impression.) The work of executive chef Andrew Yeo and chef de cuisine Adam Kube have put this venue on the map.

Billed as a "classic," the croque monsieur ($19) was an epiphanic ham and cheese, with an ultra-light, almost gossamer square of golden brown, eggy brioche enclosing thin slices of moist, savory North Country Smokehouse ham cosseted in a mixture of rich, creamy Mornay sauce and a layer of Emmenthaler cheese. Other classics included the chicken potpie ($24), with flavorful hunks of white and dark meat combined with carrots, onions and celery in a chicken velouté under a feathery, flakey puff pastry crust. A seared licorice-honey glazed chicken ($26), a semi-boned poussin with a sweet coating of anise, thyme and rosemary, outshone the smoked pork chop ($25), though the latter boasted a winning combination of sides with tasty caramelized onions, smashed potatoes and apple sauce.

Starters are not to be skipped. Visitors to town would expect a clam chowder ($11), and Artisan's bowl is built from a first-rate seafood stock thickly populated with fresh chopped clams and al dente potatoes. From a selection of four flatbreads, a version topped with Gruyère, lobster and artichokes made an appetizer fit for four ($21). Those preferring earthier luxury may opt for the flatbread with mozzarella, onions and truffled mushrooms ($18).

Daily entrée specials include short ribs ($26) on Wednesdays. Braised to fall-off-the-bone tenderness, the robust beef flavor was paired with the hearty winter sides of Brussels sprouts, mashed potatoes and carrots.

Physically, the 80-seat dining room suffers from its proximity to a noisy bar, a situation that could be solved by heightening the wooden divider. Otherwise the space is comfortable and stylish, with ivory leather banquettes and booths, and floor-to-ceiling windows facing Avery Street.

Service ranged from friendly and enthusiastic to poor. On one night, the reservation I made couldn't be found, though there thankfully was a table available. The wrong beverage was delivered on another evening. Even on a slow night, there were long intervals between courses. Also unfortunate, the pricey wine list offered no bottles under $40 and few under $50. Whitehaven Sauvignon Blanc from New Zealand ($48) exhibited the grape's signature citric freshness, and the 2009 Lafite Réserve Spéciale Bordeaux from Rothschild ($55) had surprisingly soft tannins for a wine so young. Both options are delicious, but not exactly value priced.

First prize in the dessert category was taken by the crème brûlée ($8), a traditional, creamy preparation with restrained sweetness. Chai-spiced rice pudding ($7) and chocolate lava cake ($10) also earned passing grades, proving Artisan's pastry chef, Kerry Meister, provides a superb ending to a delicious meal.

When more care is taken with the service, Artisan Bistro can further distinguish itself from the crowded hotel-dining field. Travelers to the city will be pleasantly surprised with the quality. As the staff develops their craft, locals should also schedule a visit. ×××

LET IT SNOW

The 25th annual "SnowBall" took place at the Boston Marriott Copley Place on Dec. 2. The event benefits Santa Claus Anonymous, which distributed the donations among three charities: Girls' L.E.A.P., the City School and Computer Clubhouse. Approximately 1,300 guests attended the event, which included casino games, an auction and dancing. The evening raised $100,000.

The 28th annual "A Company Christmas at Pops" was held on Dec. 14 at Symphony Hall. Some 1,800 people filled the venue for the holiday concert and raised more than $1 million for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's youth and community outreach programs.

Q: WHAT'S ALL THE BUZZ ABOUT USING NON-SURGICAL ULTRASOUND BODY CONTOURING TO REDUCE FAT AND INCHES: DOES IT WORK?

A: Yes, indeed, there is now an alternative to liposuction: Bella Contour, a new non-surgical way to reduce unwanted body fat and inches. This body contouring treatment is ideally suited for people who have unwanted fat around the waist, love handles, buttocks, thighs and upper arms. Our treatment reduces circumference, tightens skin and smoothes cellulite.

It is based on three technologies:

- Ultrasound to vibrate and stimulate the fat cells to release their contents.
- Interferential therapy to increase the fat cells' permeability, allowing lipids to escape.
- Vacuum therapy to increase blood flow to the area to remove the released lipids.

In short, SkinHealth's treatment stimulates fat cells, causing the release of lipids to be emptied from fat cells. The excess fat that is released is then used naturally by our body for fuel, and the fat cells shrink back to their original size.

The treatment is extremely safe, non-invasive, great for men and women, completely pain-free, there is literally no recovery or downtime, and no known side-effects.

Four to ten sessions are required, and at SkinHealth, we typically see results even after the first treatment!

SEARCH PARTY

Reconstructing a bar crawl by hitting the "back" button

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

THE WEBSITE Texts From Last Night is an excellent time-waster, but the veracity of the material is undermined by the expectation of public consumption. If you're writing texts with an eye toward entertainment, you're going to dramatize the prior night's antics. Or just outright make stuff up. Would you really text your friend, "Houston, we have a problem" to let him know that you blacked out in Boston and woke up in Houston? I call shenanigans, Texts From Last Night. Also, nobody is drinking that much Franzia.

There's a more dependable digital archive of your prior night's antics: your browser's search history. I recently spent a night on the town in Portland, Ore., and the next morning I realized that the Safari "back" button was like a breadcrumb trail to retrace my steps. Let's start at the beginning.

SEARCH:
"CAPITAL OF NORTH CAROLINA"

OK: the first bar. I'm on a story assignment with a photographer, Matt, and we've just settled in for a well-earned beer. Next to me at the bar is a real gold digger, and not in the Kanye West sense. I'm talking about a person who searches for precious metal in them thar' hills. The surface of the bar is copper, and the gold prospector comments on its potential value (this guy knows his metal prices). I remark that we should pry off the top of the bar and have a party with the proceeds. He studies the bar and replies, "Yeah, man, you could have a pretty good night with this thing! Maybe two nights."

Eventually, discussion of Charlotte's gold rush precipitates a disagreement about the capital of North Carolina. Matt and the prospector wager a beer on whether the capital of North Carolina is Charlotte or Raleigh. I Google "Capital of North Carolina," and it's Raleigh. Matt pays up. I've just used an iPhone to settle a bet with a gold prospector in a saloon, a juxtaposition of technology and old-timey Western culture not seen since Cowboys and Aliens.

SEARCH:
"PORTLAND CITY GRILL"

Before we part ways with our metal-obsessed friend, he provides a dinner recommendation: the Portland City Grill. But his directions leave something to be desired ("It's that way," he says, while pointing toward the far wall of the windowless bar). So I Google it, and soon Matt and I are entering the lobby of a nondescript office building. A few moments later we're stepping out of the elevator on the 30th floor to discover a lounge that's something like a compact version of the State Room—a secret cool place in the sky. The view is great, and dinner is enlivened by a hyperactive six-year-old who keeps bum-rushing the bar and getting bounced by an increasingly irate waitress. The kid spends the next half-hour rolling around on the carpet outside the elevators. I'd estimate that half our fellow patrons are aghast at the tyke's behavior. And, this being Portland, the others are aghast that a child's self-actualization is being denied by the patriarchal restaurant power structure.

SEARCH:
"SHUFFLEBOARD SCORING"

After dinner, Matt and I walk into a nearly empty bar that has a shuffleboard table. Since every shuffleboard table I've ever seen is either caked in filthy sand or constantly occupied by professional endurance shuffleboard players, I don't know the rules. I Google them, and we begin playing. By our third game, the bar is filling up. Matt takes a measure of the crowd and announces, "I think this a gay bar." We continue playing. Matt poses the question, "How are you supposed to know what kind of bar it is when you're the first ones there?" This is a valid question, but I suggest that the pink neon martini glass above the door might've been a hint. Sorry if we overstayed our welcome, gay Portlanders, but I don't get many chances to play shuffleboard.

At our next stop, Matt and the bartender strike up a conversation about North Dakota. She used to be a stripper there, and he recently did a story about North Dakota cattle ranchers who became overnight millionaires by putting cows on cargo planes and sending them to Kazakhstan. My thin repertoire of North Dakota talking points—Hey, how about that Bakken formation?—is badly upstaged. At least the next time I meet someone from North Dakota, I can lie and say I was there loading cattle onto a 747 with rich cowboys.

After a while, I notice that Matt's gone missing, so after a halfhearted search I take the opportunity to ghost out and call it a night. And thus, the night ends not with Google, but a text to communicate my retreat. Matt replies, "I was at the bar getting beers. I'll drink 'em both. Good times." Or, as Texts From Last Night would put it, "I'm in jail. Lost a kidney in bet with strippers. Woke up wearing a deployed parachute. Bring Franzia." ✖✖✖

The School of Sports {RICH LEVINE}

ON TUUKKA TIME, PEYTON, BASS AND BAILEY

5 WINTER OVER/UNDERS

Pats Playoff Wins: Over/under 2.5 As always, it's Super Bowl or bust for the Pats. This year, I think they'll make it, where they'll face either Green Bay or New Orleans, and—for the first time in 10 years—find themselves as underdogs in the Big Game. You remember what happened before, so you can't be surprised by my prediction: Pats win 20-17, on a last-second field goal by Adam Vinatieri. Pick: Over Bruins 20-Goal Scorers: Over/under 10.5 In 1978, the Bruins set an NHL record with 11 20-goal scorers. Do these B's have a chance to match it? Probably not, but they have seven guys who are well on their way to 20, and another four in striking distance. Either way, the Bruins are by far Boston's deepest team. So deep, it's rumored they could put your ass to sleep. Pick: Under.

FAIR SHARE Bass leaps for yet another jumper.

Ray Allen's Season Three-Point Percentage: Over/under .450 Ray Allen's shooting .628 from three-point range—which defies the laws of age, physics and more than 120 years of basketball. Can he keep it up? No way. Can he stay above .450? Sure! That'd still be the most efficient season of Allen's Hall of Fame career, not too mention a new Celtics record. (Unless you count the 1.000 Antoine Walker shot in his dreams.) Pick: Over

Tuukka Rask's Goals Against Average: Over/under Tim Thomas' You can't complain about the season Thomas is having, but you can't deny that, statistically, Rask has been better. (At press, Tuukka leads the NHL with a ridiculous 1.59 GAA, while Thomas sits fifth at 1.99.) My guess is that Rask eventually cools down. But if not, they're in line to become only the second goalie tandem in 10 years to both finish in the top five. Eat your heart out, Goldberg. Pick: Over

Brandon Bass's Season Assist Total: Over/under 40 Bass has been the best aspect of the Celtics sluggish start, but for all he brings to the table, he's developing into Boston's biggest ball hog since Leon Powe. Bass had six assists over the C's first 10 games, and he's shown no signs of changing. Somewhere out there, Mark Blount is smiling. Pick: Under

1 ONE CLOSING THOUGHT

It's hard to write about the Sox after this barely existent off-season, but hey, they got a closer! Anyone who claims to know how Andrew Bailey will perform is lying; he's never closed under these conditions. But he sure beats that guy from Houston you've never heard of.

2 TRADE REQUESTS

PEYTON AND THE JETS Sure, it might complicate the AFC East, but I love the idea of Peyton Manning in New York. The Jets will have to give up a ton, but if Manning's feet are nearly as impressive as his arm, Rex will make it happen.

DWIGHT TO DALLAS I don't want to see Dwight Howard in New Jersey/Brooklyn—too close for comfort. And I definitely don't want him in L.A. So of all the possible destinations, he might as well go to Dallas. And that should be fine with Dwight. So long as they get Nickelodeon in the locker room.

4 DATES TO WATCH

1/21: The Bruins are in for a rare challenge, as the conference-leading Rangers come to town. Expect the B's to only win by seven goals, instead of their customary nine.

1/22: It's Championship Sunday in the NFL, as the league's four remaining teams battle for a spot alongside Madonna on the game's biggest stage.

1/23: "This is the day we've all been practicing for, boys!" screams the head chef at TD Garden. Big Baby makes his grand return to Boston.

1/29: Big TV day for masochists: The NHL All-Star Game starts at 4 pm. The NFL Pro Bowl kicks off at 7 pm. Everyone drinks the Kool-Aid at midnight.

3 CELTIC CONCERNS

Backup Point Guard The bench is an issue, and that has a lot to do with who's running the show. Sure, Keyon Dooling is nice, but he's not a player who makes the other guys better, and that's what this crew needs. Where can the C's turn? Well, I hear Joe Forte's available.

The Big Guys Second-chance points are killing the Celtics, and that's due to some really sad rebounding. KG can't hang on the boards anymore. Same for Jermaine O'Neal and Chris Wilcox. Greg Stiemsma showed potential, but he's been buried for some reason. The C's need help in the post—anyone seen 'Sheed?

Rajon Rondo's Body Rondo's been great, but he's also spent more time lying face down on the court than resting comfortably on the bench. Listen, I understand you need him to play big minutes, but Rondo's not Wes Welker—if he keeps taking this kind of pounding he won't be around for long. (Maybe he can borrow Welker's pads?)

"One of the greatest pleasures I've ever had cooking was the time I made Paula Deen an arugula salad."

Soroff On MELISSA CLARK

The New York Times food writer tells us about bogus reality shows, fussy food and why roast chicken is boring.

FOOD WRITER AND COOKBOOK AUTHOR MELISSA CLARK was born and raised in New York. She earned her MFA from Columbia, worked as a professional chef and caterer, and is now a columnist for The New York Times. She has written 32 cookbooks, and has collaborated on books with chefs like Daniel Boulud and White House pastry chef Bill Yosses. The Modern Vegetarian Kitchen, which she coauthored with Peter Berley, won both a James Beard award and a Julia Child Cookbook award. Her most recent, Cook This Now, is a compendium of seasonally driven comfort food dishes. She lives in Brooklyn.

Jonathan Soroff: One thing that'll make you avoid a restaurant?
Melissa Clark: If I see chicken mixed with pasta, I'm out the door. Something about that combination you know is going to be vile. In Italy, they don't take chicken and mix it with pasta. So that's one big clue that sends me screaming.

Favorite restaurant book?
I read Down and Out in Paris and London when I worked in a restaurant. Makes you feel good about certain hygiene standards that have been implemented since it was written.

One thing most people don't realize about restaurants?
People think chefs do all sorts of nasty things to their food but they don't... purposefully.

Is there something you hate to cook?
Fussy food. I can't stand having to line things up in a straight line or anything precise. Makes my skin crawl. If the whole recipe depends on measuring something exactly or I have to use some obscure tool, forget it.

One basic dish on which you judge a restaurant or a cook?
Caesar salad is a good one, because they usually suck. A lot of people judge a restaurant based on its roast chicken, but I never order roast chicken. It's the most boring thing on the menu. So I guess I judge them on the simpler things. The bread basket. The first thing that comes. The quality of the butter. If they didn't care enough to mold the butter into a little dish, you know they don't really care about much.

Is Martha Stewart pure evil?
No! Martha's great! She's taught me a lot, and I continue to learn from her.

Are TV chefs charlatans?
It's all food porn. They all use the same lighting and camera angles. And that's fine. What gets me is the reality cooking shows, which are completely fake and completely staged. The annoying part is that if the chef wins, it actually ups his or her status, and that is completely bogus.

Grossest thing you've ever eaten?
Waterbug on a stick. Maggots. Oh, a deep-fried tarantula! I ate that at the Explorers Club, and it was a little like soft-shell crab.

Is there a silver bullet you use in the kitchen?
Really, really good olive oil, and there's this Turkish pepper you can buy at spice stores. It's the most delicious, fruity spice, and it's not hard to find. It's called Urfa or Aleppo, and, along with olive oil, it fixes anything you messed up.

Does butter make everything better?
Yes. That's another secret weapon. Bacon, too.

One spice you can't live without?
A good flaky sea salt. I carry it in my purse at all times.

A food trend you're sick of?
Jerusalem artichokes I'm seeing everywhere, and I can't stand them.

Who's your audience?
People like me. They love good food, don't have a lot of time and don't want to fuss.

Are chefs intrinsically sexy?
Absolutely not. There are sexy chefs, but there's nothing intrinsically sexy about the profession. I don't even think firefighters are intrinsically sexy.

Do you have a seduction dish?
No. Whether it's a chocolate truffle, or a raw oyster with a mignonette, or shaving a white truffle directly onto someone's tongue, you're not going to get anywhere until you get to know them as a person. The food itself isn't sexy. It's the fact that you're making the effort.

One thing you can never say no to?
I love sea urchin. It's delicious. White truffles, too. But not in the same dish.

How do you feel about food movements?
I love expanding one's horizons when it comes to cooking and food, but I'll admit I got into a bit of trouble when I tried the nose-to-tail thing. I ended up with a pair of hairy pig feet.

Hardest regional cuisine to master?
I don't think anything is intrinsically hard, but when you're not familiar with it, it's off-putting. I'm not that familiar with Malaysian ingredients, so I'm sort of like, "What do you do with those dried shrimp?" So it's the ingredients, I think, more than technique, per se.

What one thing makes a great cookbook?
A knowledgeable writer.

Person you'd most like to cook for?
One of the greatest pleasures I've ever had cooking was the time I made Paula Deen an arugula salad. She made me deep-fried bacon, and I made her an arugula salad.

So what's for dinner tonight?
My husband won't be home, so I'll be having dinner by myself, and on nights when I'm alone, I eat a bunch of cheese. One of my favorite meals is just a great salad and some wonderful cheeses. That totally does it for me. ×××

DRINKING BUDDIES

FOOD AND COCKTAIL PAIRINGS IN BOOZEHOUND HEAVEN

BY KYLE WRIGHT / PHOTOS BY EMILY KNUDSEN

RESTRICTING COCKTAILS TO PRE- AND post-dinner is now a tired tradition, thanks to the surge in restaurants and bars that value what's in your glass as much as what's on your plate. But finding the perfect pairing poses a big challenge: Mixed drinks typically have more aggressive flavors than wine or beer. We've searched the city for the ultimate complementary sips and nibbles and divided them by liquor. After all, one man's Aviation could be another's downfall.

AREA FOUR

CHICKEN WINGS are an enduring bar snack, but Area Four swaps Buffalo-sludged drumsticks for bites bursting with umami flavor thanks to a marinade of soy, ginger and bourbon ($9). Red pepper flakes give them enough spice to stand up to the TAMPOPO ($11), bar manager Chris Graeff's East-meets-West mix of classic American bourbon with ginger syrup and Amaro. "A lot of the same flavors can be found in both," he says.

AREA FOUR, 500 TECHNOLOGY SQUARE, CAMBRIDGE (617-758-4444) AREAFOUR.COM

POSTO

"I started playing around with the recipe for an Old Fashioned," says Posto bar manager Anthony Valera. "And then I had this idea for a drink that would work really well in the colder months." The result is the OLD MAN WINTER ($10.95), a blend of Redemption Rye, crushed orange, ginger beer, rhubarb bitters and granulated sugar. "It's the kind of drink you can have anytime, so many people order it with our pastas." Try it with the meaty BOLOGNESE ($19.95; $13.95, half order).

POSTO, 187 ELM ST., SOMERVILLE (617-625-0600) PIZZERIAPOSTO.COM

SWEET CHEEKS

Patrons are often surprised to see that Sweet Cheeks swaps classic barware for Mason jars, but general manager/cocktail impresario Ian Grossman thinks it adds to the down-home feel of chef Tiffani Faison's Fenway barbecue joint. "Glassware certainly has an impact on the flavor of what you're drinking," he says. "But I was conscious of that when I created our list." His theory is most evident in THE DAMN YANKEE ($10), a blend of W.L. Weller bourbon, maple liqueur and bitters that makes for a sturdy and slightly sweet libation. Also available in a Mason jar: a luxurious spin on BUTTERSCOTCH PUDDING ($6) that's creamy enough to erase any instant Jell-O memories from the mind.

SWEET CHEEKS, 1381 BOYLSTON ST. BOSTON (617-266-1300) SWEETCHEEKSQ.COM

GIN

THE HAWTHORNE

The casual, inviting vibe of Jackson Cannon's Fenway lounge belies the seriousness given to the art of the cocktail. In the TUXEDO ($12), he blends gin with sherry and orange bitters—an ideal gateway to classic tipples for those who typically rely on tonic. Cannon recommends trying it with REUBEN TOAST ($12), bite-sized open-face sandwiches that pile a lot of flavor onto house-made bread. "Together they're very balanced. You need something to stand up to the bolder flavors of the toasts."

THE HAWTHORNE, 500A COMM. AVE., BOSTON (617-532-9150)
THEHAWTHORNEBAR.COM

COGNAC BISTRO

"People are definitely lingering on the cocktail list a little longer," says chef Nelson Cognac. While many diners naturally opt from the 19 Cognacs on offer, bar manager Michael Costa's evolving lineup features creative takes on mainstays, like the CARTHUSIAN GIMLET ($11), a Chartreuse-spiked, bright and herbal spin on the classic. When paired with the SAUTÉED DUCK BREAST ($24), the beverage's subtle lime undertones explode on the palate and slice through the sweetness of the dish's braised red cabbage.

COGNAC BISTRO, 455 HARVARD ST., BROOKLINE
(617-232-5800) COGNACBISTRO.COM

BLUE INC.

Bar manager Trish LaCount's drink list at Blue Inc. flaunts a lot of high-tech ingredients and surprising combinations, but the popular MEMOIRS OF A COCKTAIL ($12) reveals her softer, simpler side. "It's my spin on a French 75," she says of the fluted delight. "It's just so smooth, and you don't feel like you're necessarily drinking." It mixes Farmer's Botanical Small Batch Organic Gin with Champagne and simple syrup infused with lemongrass, Thai basil and lavender. "I love it with the PEACH CLAFOUTIS ($9) because they're both so airy."

VODKA

RED LANTERN

EGG ROLLS are an Asian restaurant's greasy cliché, but at Red Lantern, executive chef Kevin Long serves crispy cylinders packed with duck, cabbage and carrots ($12). "The trick is to control the moisture of the filling. Most people don't know how to work with the wrappers, and if you don't prepare them properly they'll be gummy." Wash them down with bar and beverage director Joseph O'Connor's GRASS-FED MULE ($11). Served in a tiki glass, it blends the bold flavors of lemongrass-infused vodka and ginger beer.

RED LANTERN, 39 STANHOPE ST., BOSTON (617-262-3900)

EAST BY NORTHEAST

"We've infused vodka with ROOIBOS TEA for a couple of different cocktails, but this one really works," says East by Northeast general manager Blayne Daley. "It's more of a citrus tea, so it's best to keep in that theme." To that end, this season's iteration uses apple cider and orange to complement a creamy vanilla kick that the vodka pulls from the tea ($9). Paired with SWEET AND SOUR PORK MEATBALLS piled into house-made mantou bread ($8), the cocktail cuts the astringency of the sauce. Sugary sips are mellowed by the briny crunch of the accompanying pickled vegetables.

(617-876-0286) EXNECAMBRIDGE.COM

HARVEST

Pastry chef Brian Mercury's love for local ingredients is a natural fit at Harvest, where farm-to-table has always been the mind-set. For his FLOURLESS CHOCOLATE CAKE ($11), Mercury uses Somerville's Taza chocolate to form a fudgy slab. Topped with peanut butter mousse, peanut brittle and marshallows, it's the ultimate candy bar. "These flavors aren't crazy, they're what you want with chocolate," he says. The NESPRESSO MARTINI ($12) incorporates Rhode Island's Autocrat Coffee Syrup to give the vodka and Baileys combo a milkshake quality.

HARVEST, 44 BRATTLE ST., CAMBRIDGE (617-868-2255)
HARVESTCAMBRIDGE.COM

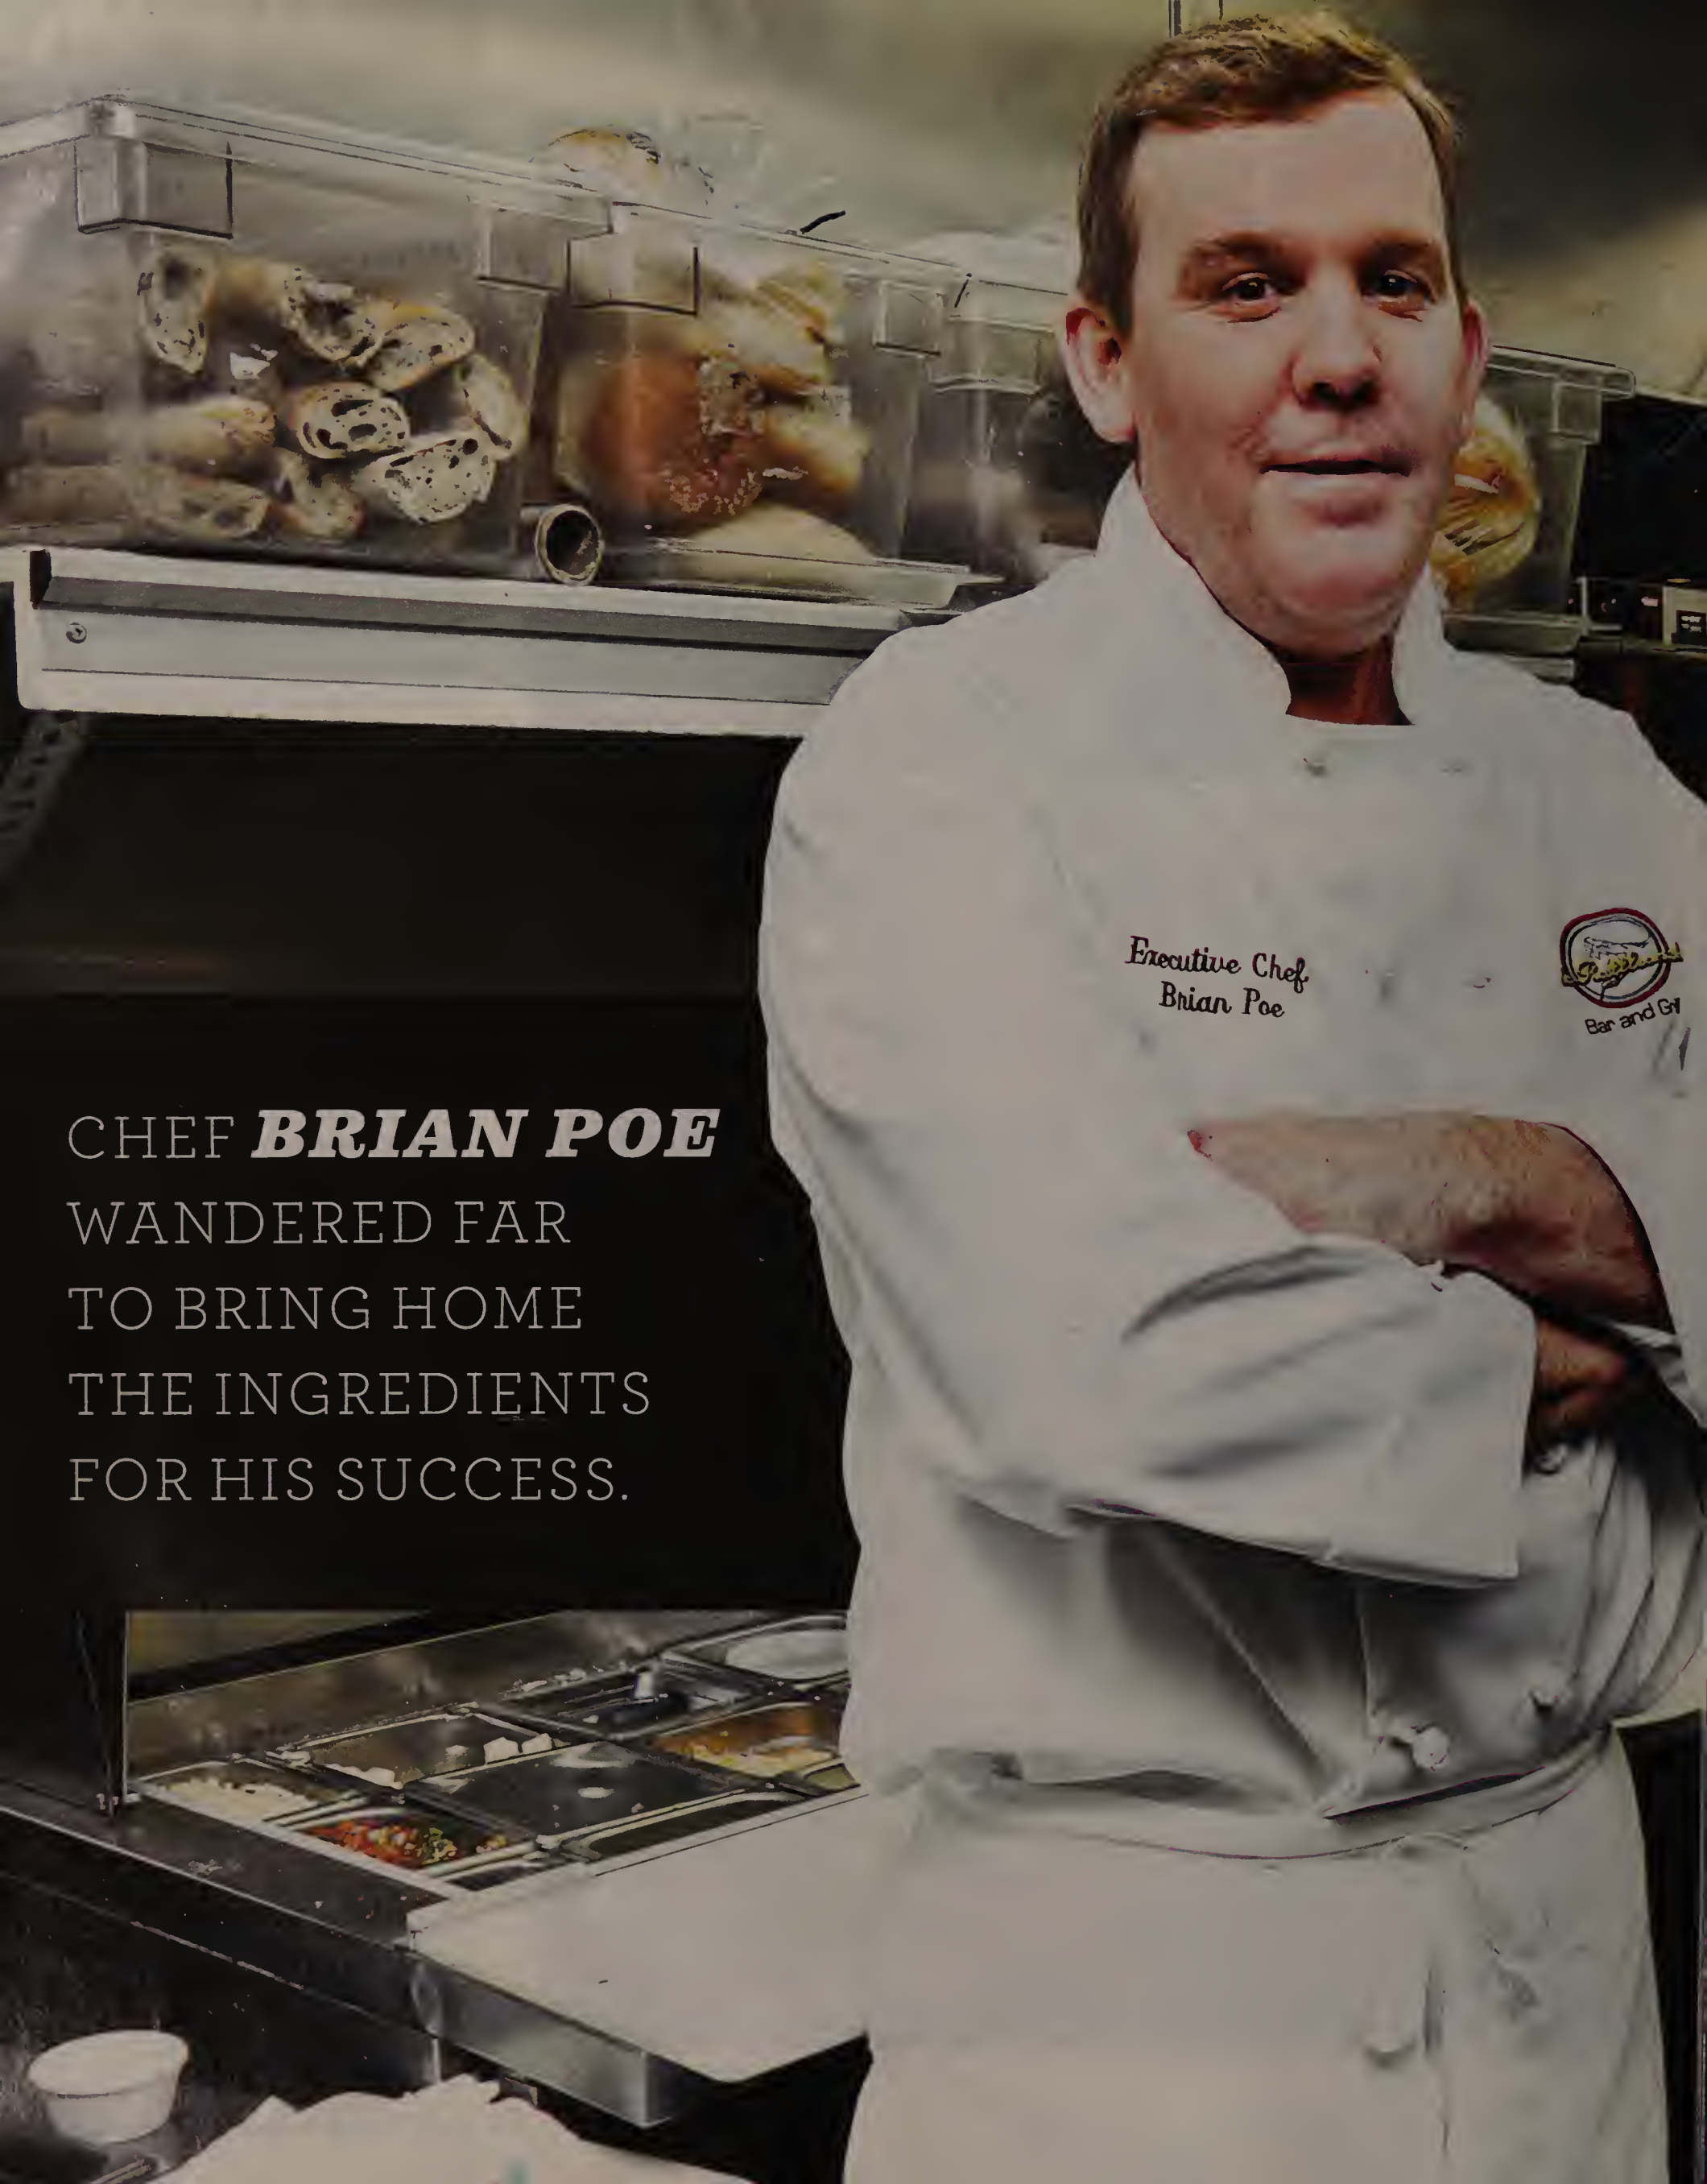
RUM

BACKBAR

Despite being served in a soda glass and being named the SMOKE 'N' COKE ($11), Sam Treadway's version of the frat-house standard doesn't actually contain cola. It gets its fizz from New England's Moxie soda. "Our chef introduced me to it, and I've used it ever since," says Treadway. He dreamed up the drink at Tales of the Cocktail in New Orleans before creating it in the Legacy Cocktail Showcase at the House of Blues this November. It took top honors, and now the drink, a mix of Bacardi Oakheart, Moxie and smoked ice, sits pretty on Backbar's menu. The salty kick of the CHARCUTERIE PLATE ($7, per item; or $15, for sampler) is a perfect match. "There really isn't a better bar snack."

BACKBAR, 9 SANBORN COURT, SOMERVILLE (617-718-0249)
BACKBARUNION.COM

TRADE



"I think rum is definitely the next thing for bar-goers," says Sean Griffing, co-owner of Trade. He's chosen to showcase the spirit in the KINGSTON NEGRONI ($10), a twist on the classic cocktail menu staple. "No one ever gets tired of a Negroni," he adds. This one subs Jamaican rum for gin to deliver a sugary finish. The bold flavors stand up to dishes with heavy spices, like the LAMB SAUSAGE FLATBREAD ($15). "A sweeter drink just wouldn't work."

TRADE, 540 ATLANTIC AVE., BOSTON (617-451-1234)
TRADE-BOSTON.COM

MOOO

BANANAS FOSTER is a classic steakhouse dessert, but it usually devolves into mushy nubs of fruit. At Mooo, three brûléed banana halves ($12), accompanied by ice cream and sponge cake, are served with a buttery, banana-chunked rum sauce. A natural match is the MELBACH ($15), bar manager Melissa Cone's reimagining of a Seelbach. Instead of the usual bourbon, aged Guatemalan rum adds depth to the Champagne and bitters.

MAN

On a blustery mid-winter afternoon in a dive bar in Revere, the patrons' eyes never lift from the Keno numbers to take in the beachside view. Cut-price drafts, ancient pool tables, crumbling dartboards. This is where chef Brian Poe goes to ground. He's not here to cook—he's got at full-time gig at the Rattlesnake on Boylston Street and a new place, the Tip Tap Room, opening on Beacon Hill this spring. Rather, he's in what he calls his "man cave." After having traveled the hemisphere hunting for culinary inspiration, a local watering hole seems like Poe's natural habitat.

If anyone in Boston is the exemplar of foodie sophistication bleeding into mass culture, it's Poe. This is a man who popularized lamb osso bucco at a place that used to reach its culinary apotheosis in the nacho. But his cooking is populist, even if it might use lavender crema. And the chef, like his menu, is the sum of many parts.

He's the product of a Southern upbringing, Southwestern resorts, chic hotels in the Northeast and, for variety, South American villages. Call it fusion, Mex-flex, all-Americasian, his style is undoubtedly individualistic. He says his food is "a collective goody bag," as are dishes like his whiskey bacon-topped Kobe burger stuffed with lobster, foie gras and black truffles (a favorite on Internet chatboards).

Cherubic face, pressed jeans and lack of visible tats notwithstanding, Poe says, "I was a hell-raiser," speaking with that disarming sweetness common to polite-but-crazy Southern gentlemen. Born in Georgia, schooled in Alabama, Poe has traveled through 38 states and 10 countries, exploring food scenes, cuisines and techniques. Now, at 39, with a wife and condo not far from that dive bar in Revere, Poe says his rambling days may be over.

SAUCY ATTITUDE
INSIDE POE'S KITCHEN

This is a man who popularized lamb osso bucco at a place that used to reach its culinary apotheosis in the nacho.

The wanderlust started in 1995, when he took a job at Auburn University's hotel and conference center, moving quickly up the ranks to banquet chef. "That was when I found what I wanted to do for the rest of my life." Once the light bulb went on, he took off, accepting a chef-de-cuisine gig at the Hilton Atlanta Northeast during the '96 Olympics, where he added Northern Italian dishes to his résumé. Along with the use of basil, he picked up a friendship with his boss, Gary Mlinarich, who was to become a lifelong influence.

One steamy August day, Mlinarich swung by the Hilton in a U-Haul and said to Poe, "Hey, want to go cross-country?" The ensuing trip inspired Poe to move, landing at Steamers Oyster Grill in Phoenix, Ariz. After collecting cooking awards and seafood knowledge, he trucked on to Mesa, where he learned Cajun and Pacific Rim flavors, adding andouille and coriander to his professional larder.

Meanwhile, Mlinarich, who had found a home with the Regal hotel group (now Millennium), urged Poe to get a "higher-end" position. Poe signed with the group and landed in Scottsdale, a sun-scrubbed college town stocked with rich retirees. At the posh McCormick Ranch resort, Poe helped triple food and beverage sales with an Asian, French and Southwestern menu. He also toured Napa Valley. "It was in Napa that I learned that something coming right out of the ground, like mesclun greens, could be so good," he says.

In 2003, Poe stepped into the storied shoes of Lydia Shire, Gordon Hamersley, Jasper White and Jody Adams as executive chef at the Bostonian Hotel's Seasons Restaurant. "I threw my résumé in the hat," he says. "Next thing I was living in the hotel across the street from Faneuil Hall. What a blast." One of the first voicemails he got was from Shire herself, who had opened the restaurant in 1982 with White. "I thanked her for building such a great reputation," recalls Poe, and she said, "It's your job to keep it up."

Under Poe's guidance, the $2 million operation won at least 10 awards in four years. While he enjoyed the success, restlessness kept him traveling. During his years at Seasons, Poe took trips to South America, California and Oregon, studying nearly all the West Coast wineries of two continents. He also moonlighted as a private chef, mainly for Curt Schilling's family, whom he knew from when Schilling played for the Arizona Diamondbacks. (Poe jokes that he got traded to Boston first.) He never got to Fenway to watch Schilling pitch in the 2004 World Series, but says, "There's nothing better than sitting in the atrium lounge of the Bostonian Hotel seeing a good friend of mine on the mound for the Red Sox, even bloodied."

By the start of 2008, Poe's wanderlust kicked in again. For the better part of a year, he traveled on an international quest for cuisine.

In Brazil, he learned the skill of cooking feijoada, a thick pork stew. In Chile, he mastered the grilled avocado and the art of catching, filleting and seasoning fish. "Everywhere I went, I just absorbed," he says. The experience paid off. "Brian's not doing tricks like molecular gastronomy," says Andy Husbands, chef/owner of Tremont 647 and Sister Sorel in the South End. "What's most interesting is his depth of knowledge, just beautiful, raw materials. Complex yet simple food with layers of developed flavor."

In 2009, after a stint at the famed Siro's in Saratoga Springs, N.Y., Poe returned to Boston to an unlikely spot. During his Seasons days, when the grip of winter squeezed too hard, Poe liked to retire to the nearby Churchill's cigar bar "as a reward." There, he had struck up a friendship with Gordon Wilcox, owner of the Rattlesnake Bar and Grill, Parish Cafe and five other successful Boston watering holes. "I knew I wanted to work with him," says Poe. "I liked his philosophy. I liked the fun, the challenge to take a great bar and infuse it with great food."

The rakish Rattlesnake had long drawn lines of margarita-swilling 20-somethings, but Wilcox had bigger plans. He wanted them to come for the cocktails, yes, but also for the New York strip. Installing a down-home dining room, Wilcox and Poe launched Poe's Kitchen at the Rattlesnake. In three years, it's gone from "mostly shots, DJs, chips and salsa" to Vermont quail tacos and an admiring Zagat write-up.

If there's a downside to Poe's eclectic background, it's that his menus can seem, to put it bluntly, weird. Most people don't conceive of spicy Taza chocolate as a flavoring for mac 'n' cheese. "For a while, I think he was trying fusion too much," says his mentor, Mlinarich, now executive chef at the exclusive Radisson Fort McDowell Resort in Scottsdale. "But he's found himself over the past two years. Keep it simple finally sunk in."

While Poe says he's "married" to the Rattlesnake, "there was room for more fun." It's a concept that recurs. "I want to go from fine dining to fun dining," he says. Wilcox remains onboard with the idea of culinary hedonism. "The Rattlesnake menu is crazy and definitely coming out of Brian," he says. "He feels not enough people are having fun with bar food."

The result is the forthcoming Tip Tap Room, a partnership between Poe, Wilcox and Justin Dalton-ameen from the Parish Cafe, slated to open this spring on Cambridge Street. With about 140 seats, its concept is to serve tips, from steak to swordfish, with waves of craft beer. "It'll be a different style of food and play," says Poe. "Play" being the operative word. A theme restaurant based around the idea of bites of varied meats has a particular, Poe-ish whimsy. Building a restaurant on the ideal steak tip is no more farfetched than serving duck confit chile relleno with foie gras.

After a few beers at BK's Bar and Grill, Poe walks on the beach and talks about his home, the high-rise facing the ocean on the gentrified Revere Beach Strand that he shares with his Brazilian-born wife.

"When I lived in the South and the Southwest," he says, "I had friends from Boston who'd tell me how they missed the water. I never understood. Now, I get it."

He sounds settled. He sounds at home. ✖✖✖

STYLE PROFILE / by Alexandra Hall

"I recently got six inches taken off my hair. It definitely took some adjusting."

"I'm obsessed with a red lip right now. I used to do it only at nighttime, but now I do it more and more during the day."

"Of all my accessories, my most cherished is my mini-laptop. It's got an adorable design, and the cover's a pretty microsuede."

"My clothing tends to be neutral, then I hit it with a great accent color—red and yellow are the ones I usually can't resist."

"The fashion calculation I'm constantly making is how to go from business meetings to evening events without heading back to my closet. So I'll go for a dress with a jacket, but carry a big bag full of quick-change-artist pieces."

"I do heels as high as I can get away with. It's my favorite short girl's trick."

HOT COMMODITY

MAYBE A TRIP TO Venice isn't in the cards this year, but you can still try and recreate the romance of Murano. In a candid acknowledgment that pairing white-hot molten substances with alcohol is a recipe for fun, Diablo Glass School hosts a glassblowing demonstration accompanied by cheese and wine on Jan. 28. Mingle with other couples in the lounge and watch as sparks fly and the evening heats up to a cozy 2,400 degrees. COURTNEY CARTER

The Adventures of Tintin ★★ Working from a paper-thin script by Edgar Wright, Joe Cornish and Dr. Who scribe Steven Moffat, Steven Spielberg's The Adventures of Tintin takes off in a hurry, with our dull title character buying a toy ship that contains the first of three scrolls that'll lead to a treasure and… zzzzzzzzzz. The first and foremost problem is that there's nothing at stake. The Adventures of Tintin has its share of visual marvels—including an astonishing motorcycle chase through a crowded village that compounds Spielberg's characteristic slapstick skills to the point of absurdity and beyond. Spielberg employs Robert Zemeckis' motion capture 3-D animation techniques, which frees him from the limits of actual physical space, but the playful elation doesn't hold up. Once everything is possible, nothing is amazing anymore. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Carnage ★★★★ Sublime. Roman Polanski's dyspeptic adaptation of Yasmina Reza's Tony Award–winning God of Carnage traps two aging yuppie couples in an upscale Brooklyn apartment, then watches all pretense of civilized behavior gradually disintegrate. Their kids have gotten into a scuffle at recess, so the school demands that these parents meet to talk out the punishment. Passive-aggressive sniping abounds, until finally the Scotch comes out and all bets are off. Jodie Foster embodies a brittle limousine liberal until finally falling to pieces at the provocations of her lummox husband, John C. Reilly. Kate Winslet boozes around in pearls as a prissy mom fed up with her career-obsessed partner (Inglourious Basterds' Christoph Waltz, who never stops talking on his cell phone). Polanski's offhandedly elegant compositions map the ebbs and flows of this battle royale, all within the confines of one living room. Side-splittingly funny, it's like Edward Albee and Luis Buñuel got stuck in an elevator together. Carnage feels like a microcosm of both everything that matters and nothing of any consequence whatsoever. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

The Descendants ★★★ Despite never quite buying him as a cuckold, I enjoyed George Clooney's rumpled everyman turn in Alexander Payne's latest feature, adapted from Kaui Hart Hemmings' 2007 novel. When his cheating wife is critically injured in a boating accident during the opening credits, Clooney needs to step up and take charge of his family for the first time. The Descendants' plotless middle hour is particularly fantastic. Shailene Woodley's coltish awkwardness plays to the hesitation present in Clooney's relationship with his teen daughters, and Payne has a knack for letting scenes breathe and allowing his characters to surprise us. The central action in this very funny and often quite sad movie is Clooney stepping back and reevaluating everything and everybody he once took for granted. It feels like a transitional film for Payne, who has lost his youngman pitilessness and here reaches for a more accepting tone. It grows on you. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

The Girl With the Dragon Tattoo ★★ Proving that if you put a silk hat on a pig, it's still a pig, super-producer Scott Rudin corralled a frightening amount of talent for a newfangled Xerox of Stieg Larsson's best-selling phenomenon, which was already dragged out into a trifecta of Swedish movies just a couple years ago. Better acting, better cinematography, but in the end it's still just a rapey episode of Cold Case. Daniel Craig stars as the disgraced journalist roped into solving a 40-year-old murder on a remote island. Rooney Mara mesmerizes as the iconic Lisbeth Salander, a feral, wounded abuse victim with Goth superhero powers, once again trapped within a story sadly content to abandon her on the sidelines. Director David Fincher attempts to infuse this airport novel with the gravitas of his triumphant Zodiac by dwelling on the minutiae of the investigative process at comically absurd length. Save for Mara's searing performance, there's nothing new here. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Hugo ★★★★ Leave it to Martin Scorsese to direct a children's adventure about the importance of film preservation. Working from Brian Selznick's book, The Invention of Hugo Cabret, this miracle of a movie follows the title orphan (Asa Butterfield) as he hides out in a Parisian train station in the 1930s, winding the clocks and dodging a pratfall-riddled rent-a-cop (Sacha Baron Cohen). Meanwhile, a grumpy shopkeeper (Ben Kingsley) just might have a secret of his own. Hugo takes a sharp turn into a voluptuously helmed cinema history lesson that should be taught in schools. Scorsese employs cutting-edge digital 3-D technologies for

More like extremely offensive and incredibly bad

Extremely Loud and Incredibly Close ★

Starring Tom Hanks, Sandra Bullock, Thomas Horn, Max von Sydow, Viola Davis, Jeffrey Wright and John Goodman. Based on the book by Jonathan Safran Foer. Screenplay by Eric Roth. Directed by Stephen Daldry. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

THERE'S ONE PARTICULAR shot in Extremely Loud and Incredibly Close that I'd like to tell you about.

It arrives during a nightmare suffered by the extremely loud and cloyingly precious hero Oskar Schell (Jeopardy! Teen Tournament champ Thomas Horn). In this shot we see the protagonist's father, played by Tom Hanks—star of stage, screen and Bosom Buddies—plummeting from the roof of the World Trade Center directly into the camera lens, while a computer-generated composite of the tower collapses in perfect synch alongside his falling body.

Ever since seeing this dire and exploitative film back in December, I've become quite obsessed with this moment and its staging, bothering all my friends as I try to wrap my mind around how it was photographed and what the atmosphere must've been like on the set that day. I picture Cowboy Woody being strapped into a Peter Pan harness and repeatedly lowered into camera range this love letter to forgotten films, embracing the exploratory spirit of the medium's original pioneers. Hugo reminded me why I fell in love with movies in the first place. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Joyful Noise ★ ½ Like something out of a circus sideshow, the disfigured remains of Dolly Parton's face appear onscreen for the first time in 20 years, and I'd be lying if I said I wasn't fascinated watching all these ill-fitting spare parts attempt to emote. Alas, the occasion is a market-tested product clumsily engineered for church groups with little interest in preaching to anybody outside the choir. Parton plays second banana to Queen Latifah. Each is vying for leadership of a Georgia chorus headed for a national competition while trying to stave off the influence of these rascally kids with their dang hip-hop music. There's a breathtakingly awful performance by Jeremy Jordan as Parton's rebellious grandson, and the movie awkwardly lurches from one easily resolved non-conflict to another. The musical numbers suffer from terrible lip-synching so obviously fussed over in a recording studio that all the joy is sapped from this noise. But I did like the scene where Kris Kristofferson comes back from the dead to sing a duet with Dolly. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Melancholia ★★★★ There's a massive planet on a collision course with Earth, but knowing writer/director Lars Von Trier, we're probably more interested in its metaphorical implications. Kirsten Dunst stars as the less-interesting bipolar sister born into a family of privilege, rapid-cycling her way through one of the worst weddings ever captured on film. Granted, she never had a chance to begin with, as her mom (Charlotte Rampling) is going quietly nuts in the guest bedroom while papa (John Hurt) wrestles around with double dates. Family and friends self-destruct in blackly comic fashion throughout the shenanigans, and Dunst's Justine becomes a punishing sociopath. Full disclosure: I spent the better (and worst) parts of last year in a relationship with somebody I loved who suffered from a similar disorder. Melancholia scorched me to my core and left me unable to speak for an hour afterwards. Has there ever been a better metaphor for depression than a gigantic dark planet bearing down on you from the cosmos? (At Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Mission: Impossible—Ghost Protocol ★★★ This franchise has always been a director's demo reel in which diverse talents take turns showing off all the different ways they can film their star/producer sprinting. It's a delivery system for action set-pieces, but Brad Bird's fourth installment has some doozies, including the greatest stunt sequence I've seen in years. The brilliant animator behind The Incredibles makes his live-action debut with an astonishing facility for conveying information in bold visual flourishes. What makes Ghost Protocol special is Bird's knack for spinning our bickering crew from one absurdly dangerous situation to another with a spatial cause and effect logic worthy of Looney Tunes. A portion of the film was shot in IMAX, and for once, it's worth the extra bucks just to see how Bird and cinematographer Robert Elswit work this film's instantly classic skyscraper centerpiece, which I watched through splayed fingers and can't wait to see again. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

before a giant green screen, while a dedicated CGI crew in a faraway location studiously pores over 9/11 footage, attempting to get that WTC cascade just right.

I wonder why they didn't just go all the way and do it in 3-D?

I also wonder why—out of all the hundreds of people who work on movie shoots—somebody involved didn't raise a hand and suggest that this all might be a little bit gross?

Gross is really the only word applicable to Extremely Loud and Incredibly Close, which was adapted from Jonathan Safran Foer's widely lambasted 2005 best seller by director Stephen Daldry. He's an all-around wretched filmmaker who receives Academy Award nominations on a semiannual basis for transforming dense, well-regarded books like The Hours and The Reader into star-studded, moribund features that nobody would ever sit through a second time.

Foer's literary conceit is that 9/11 turned us all into a nation of lost children, and so it goes that we must follow Oskar, a boy who lands somewhere on the Asperger's spectrum and who lost his father on that miserable September morning. Or, as he calls it: "The Worst Day." Suffering from movie-cute aversions to public transportation and hyper-edited panic attacks, Oskar isn't a character so much as an assemblage of quirks, a precocious proto-hipster who'll presumably be writing for McSweeney's before his 13th birthday. It's not young Thomas Horn's fault that this is one of the most gratingly obnoxious movie characters with whom I've ever been trapped in a dark room. He was obviously directed that way.

I don't want to give anything away, but Oskar's journey appears intended to teach us all about how, in the immortal words of REM, everybody hurts.

As it turns out, there was a stray key discovered amidst his father's belongings, stuck in an envelope with the word "Black" scribbled on the front. A year after the attacks, the still grief-stricken Oskar sets out to meet all 472 people named "Black" in the New York City phone book, with a mysteriously mute lodger (who may or may not be related to our hero) played by Max von Sydow tagging along for the adventure.

Would you be surprised if I told you that von Sydow has the words "Yes" and "No" tattooed on the palms of his hands, and that somehow the veteran of so many Ingmar Bergman films manages to give a credible performance even though the character is little more than a writer's stunt?

I don't want to give anything away, but Oskar's journey appears intended to teach us all about how, in the immortal words of REM, everybody hurts. Some of the Blacks he meets are actually black, like Viola Davis, who, between this and The Help, has cornered the market on suffering elegantly in despicable films.

Extremely Loud and Incredibly Close is ghastly at a conceptual level. The film warps a moment of unspeakable horror into a digestible fable, with a moral delivered in a monologue by Sandra Bullock. The idea is so uninviting, it's almost easy to overlook what a terrible filmmaker Daldry is.

Flutter-cutting his way through a labyrinthine flashback structure, pointlessly prolonging the revelation of crucial information as if he were conducting a striptease, Daldry seems drunk on his own cleverness. There's not a moment in the picture that isn't bogged down by some sort of cutesy gimmick.

When 9/11 inevitably becomes a national holiday devoted to sales at mattress discounters and used-car lots, we can all look back on cheapjack movies like Extremely Loud and Incredibly Close and thank them for paving the way. ✖✖✖

The Muppets ★★★ ½ Gloriously retro from start to finish, this proudly 2-D movie eschews computer animation in favor of felt puppets and embraces the vaudeville ethos of Jim Henson's original TV program, in which silliness and sweetness go hand in hand. Credit writer/costar Jason Segel, a Judd Apatow mainstay who cashed in his clout from the raunchy hit Forgetting Sarah Marshall for a chance to bring his old heroes back to the big screen. It's a classic "getting the band back together" routine combined with a "Hey, let's put on a show!" narrative that reintroduces our beloved characters in witty and surprising ways. Segel and company get the effervescent spirit so right it's easy to forgive a few trivial missteps. For starters, there's a bit too much to-do over the film's human love story, which bogs down the otherwise bouncy proceedings. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

My Week With Marilyn ★★ Simon Curtis' adaptation of Colin Clark's suspect memoir is a great big slab of fan-fiction—a film that follows the template of 2008's Me and Orson Welles as a banal wish-fulfillment fantasy for movie buffs. Charmless Eddie Redmayne plays Clark, an idealist with silver-screen dreams, working a thankless job on Sir Laurence Olivier's The Prince and the Showgirl. Olivier, played with what looks like a prosthetic chin by Kenneth Branagh, cast American bombshell Marilyn Monroe as his costar, assuming he'd get to sleep with her. Michelle Williams, an actress apparently incapable of giving a bad performance, is the picture's lone saving grace. The Monroe va-va-voom is very clearly just another one of Norma Jean's costume changes, and the real pleasure of Williams' work is watching her flip her sex-kitten routine on and off like a light switch. One can't help wondering what a serious movie about Marilyn Monroe might've been like with the fearless Williams in the role, but this is little more than the masturbatory fancies of Redmayne's nonentity. (At Kendall Square, Walthan Embassy and in the suburbs.)

Pariah ★★ ½ Earnest, deeply felt and only slightly thin, director Dee Rees' feature debut stars the radiant Adepero Oduye as Alike, a teen poet trying to embrace her homosexuality in an awfully unfriendly New York City. Unfortunately, this obviously semiautobiographical tale hews a bit too close to the indie-movie-cliché-playbook for comfort. Did our protagonist really have to write poetry? But there's a surprisingly strong performance by Kim Wayans, of all people, as an angry, churchgoing mother, plus some stellar work from Charles Parnell as a devoted father with a few flaws of his own. Credit Rees for the density of the atmosphere, bluntly exploring an African-American subculture seldom captured on film. What the movie could've used is a subplot or two. Expanded from a Sundance-feted short film, Pariah feels awfully long at 80-odd minutes. The narrowness of its focus eventually becomes asphyxiating. (At Kendall Square.)

Shame ★★★★ Director Steve McQueen (no, not that one) follows up Hunger, his despairing Bobby Sands biopic, with an unsettling depiction of sex addiction in Manhattan. Michael Fassbender delivers the year's most fearless performance as Brandon, a successful yuppie who buries himself in an oblivion of empty hookups, seedy clubs, prostitutes and porn. When Brandon's trainwreck of a sister (Carey Mulligan) arrives needing a place to crash, their frayed family dynamic ruptures Brandon's self-imposed isolation. Short on dialogue and shot in minutes-long takes that leave the performers nowhere to hide, Shame is an exposed nerve. McQueen's vision of New York City is steely and unforgiving, all reflective surfaces and anonymity. Mulligan, too often confined to playing a kitten, is a revelation here, aching with carnal need. Look past all the sex and this is a horror movie about the loneliness and alienation imposed by modern life. (At Kendall Square.)

Sherlock Holmes: A Game of Shadows ★ ½ I worry that Robert Downey Jr. is turning into Johnny Depp. Guy Ritchie's 2009's Sherlock Holmes will never be mistaken for a great movie, but it was clever, light on its feet and at least offered the winning spectacle of Downey and Jude Law bickering like a couple of old queens. The dude-ish, bare-knuckle-brawling Holmes upset most dedicated followers of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's original stories, but I could roll with the reinterpretation. Not so with this sorry sequel, which lands in theaters like a lump of Christmas coal. It's bigger and louder, and so much less involving. Holmes can't even be bothered to solve much in this non-mystery, as he and Watson spend most of their time running from explosions that drown out their bitchy banter. Eventually Jared Harris turns up as a sorely outmatched Professor Moriarty. Yawn. There's a deadness to Downey's delivery, hitting overfamiliar beats as if he's walking through a theme park instead of a movie. He might as well be playing Captain Jack Sparrow. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Tinker Tailor Soldier Spy ★★ Let the Right One In director Tomas Alfredson's stagnant adaptation of John le Carré's spy novel revels in the source material's status as the anti-Bond thriller. Set in a 1973 rife with bad sideburns and unflattering eyeglasses, it's espionage full of ugly men toting manila folders and making insinuations in rooms so smoky that even the movie theater winds up with nicotine stains on its walls. Something very bad happened in Budapest, and Gary Oldman's George Smiley is eventually coaxed from retirement to ferret out a mole within the British secret service. Chockablock with great English character actors aching for a paycheck now that the Harry Potter series is over, Tinker Tailor fusses with a fractured time line, obscuring crucial information and priding itself on keeping the audience as far away from the plot as possible. This is an expertly mounted, enervating slog. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

The Twilight Saga: Breaking Dawn—Part One ★ Wait, what just happened? Sadly lacking the wherewithal to slog my way through Stephenie Meyer's subliterate phenomenon, this reviewer was unprepared for the gonzo plot turns of the series' final chapter, which has been cravenly split into two films for reasons of commercial calculation and severe artistic demerit. Having spent the past three movies begging to get banged by her sparkly vampire boyfriend, Edward (Robert Pattinson, acting with his hair again), Kristen Stewart's 18-year-old Bella is finally deflowered and impregnated in a thunderous anticlimax. I can't even begin to parse all the creepy anti-sex, body-horror, abortion debate issues bubbling around the ugly subtext, as I was too distracted by the gang of wolves having a psychic strategy discussion just outside the birth chamber. It looked like an outtake from Up. (I may or may not have shouted "Squirrel!" in a crowded theater.) And all that was before the toothy vampire episiotomy. Then a werewolf falls in love with a baby. People really read this garbage? (In the suburbs.)

War Horse ★★★ The schmaltziest movie of the year, War Horse is just Steven Spielberg doing what Steven Spielberg does. Even if that ain't your thing, there's still no denying that he's the most gifted craftsman of his generation. Based on Michael Morpurgo's 1982 children's book—recently adapted into a smash Broadway play by Nick Stafford—it arrives etched in the simple, bold strokes of a passed-down fable. Newcomer Jeremy Irvine (a lantern-jawed hunk who looks like Christopher Reeve perpetually on the verge of tears) trains the title mount, a magnificent creature we follow through a long procession of various owners and occasionally harrowing vignettes. Folks in impossibly ugly situations rise to the occasion by reaching out to one another with simple acts of kindness, more often than not inspired by this strangely magnetic horse. Of course, it's corny. This is a Disney movie directed by Steven Spielberg. Resistance is futile. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Young Adult ★ Written by Diablo Cody, who won an Oscar for coming up with Juno's obnoxious catchphrases, Young Adult feels like it was made to settle some old scores. Charlize Theron stars as a drunken divorcée ghostwriting the final installment in a canceled series of insipid tween novels. Wildly misinterpreting an e-mailed birth announcement from her high school flame (Patrick Wilson), she heads back to her hometown to break up his marriage. On one hand, the film is a mean-spirited revenge fantasy, in which the girl who was more popular than you in high school arrives home 20 years later as a failed shrew. Director Jason Reitman wallows in agonizingly long scenes of her public humiliation, while Theron's fearlessly grating performance asks for no audience empathy whatsoever. On the other hand, we must suffer the movie's septic condescension toward small-town life. Cody and Reitman appear to be primarily interested in making cheap jokes at the expense of anybody who isn't lucky enough to be Diablo Cody or Jason Reitman. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Doctors Without Borders/ Médecins Sans Frontières (MSF) currently operates medical humanitarian programs in nearly 70 countries, including Afghanistan, Somalia, Myanmar, and other areas in crisis.

Join panelists from Doctors Without Borders, Physicians for Human Rights, Tufts' Feinstein International Center, and the Harvard Humanitarian Initiative for a discussion of the dilemmas faced by both humanitarian and human rights organizations trying to work in crisis zones. How different are the two approaches? Are they compatible on the ground? How are decisions made about establishing projects? And what compromises are acceptable when negotiating access to populations in immediate danger?

DOCTORS WITHOUT BORDERS

Doom and Gloom

Bogged Down If sleek cinematography, grating neurosis and uncontrollable paranoia are your idea of entertainment, it's probably a good idea to grab tickets to Lars von Trier's Melancholia at the Brattle Theatre on Jan. 26. Its (Some of) The Best of 2011 series offers a chance to see many of the year's most lauded flicks before awards season kicks off. Kirsten Dunst's turn as a depressed bride puttering around at the end of the world has already started collecting nominations, and took top honors from the National Society of Film Critics. Here's a last chance to see Oscar bait and upcoming Netflix top picks on the big screen. Kiley Jacques

EXPLOSIVE VIEW

Jazz pianist Jason Moran modernizes Monk.

AS A CHILD GROWING UP in Houston, Jason Moran hated playing the family piano that now graces his Manhattan home.

"My mother had this bowl of potpourri on top, and I just dumped the whole thing on the inside, hoping it would corrupt the strings and the action, and I wouldn't have to practice anymore," says Moran, now 36. "But that didn't work. The potpourri is still sitting at the bottom."

Luckily, he was drawn to the piano at age 13 after hearing Thelonious Monk's "'Round Midnight," sensing a connection between the jazz icon's rhythms and hip-hop. "It was really the epiphany that shifted everything, the focus of my life," Moran recalls. "People talk about how Monk composes space... he would edit himself in a way that lets everything breathe."

Today, Moran leads the Bandwagon, one of the most dynamic trios in jazz, reveling in cross-genre juxtapositions and earning a 2010 MacArthur Foundation "Genius Grant" to pursue his vision. Among his recent projects is In My Mind: Monk at Town Hall 1959, a multimedia performance reflecting on the life and music of his formative inspiration. The piece has its Boston debut at Jordan Hall on Feb. 2 and serves as the culmination of Moran's current teaching residency at New England Conservatory.

"I resisted Monk for a long time—I felt it'd be too close to home," Moran says from New York. The turnaround came in his discovery of rehearsal tapes for the Town Hall show, Monk's first large-band outing. "I've used sounds of him tap dancing, sounds of him speaking, conversations he had with the arranger," he says. "The canvas just exploded in a way that I thought could be really interesting."

Moran also examines his hero's North Carolina roots with video of the plantation where his great-grandparents were slaves, noting that their master's name was Monk. "Monk is a cool-ass name, but it's also a vestige of slavery, this scar of American history," the composer says. "Most people, when they talk about Thelonious Monk, won't talk about this part. They'll focus on the music and how quirky and eccentric he is—and those are fine things to focus on. But he's not just a musician. He's a man."

"Monk is a cool-ass name, but it's also a vestige of slavery."

Personal context provides an essential element for Moran, who'll supplement his trio with five of his NEC students as a brass section at Jordan Hall. "I want each of the musicians to be thinking about how important their personal lives are to their artistic practice rather than just focusing on technique," he says. "Musicians often transcribe themselves or they transcribe other musicians on their instruments. I think, 'Why don't you transcribe your life? Who are the people in your life? What are the sounds in your life? How can they be manifested in the music?'"

When creating his pieces, Moran first traces his palette to his parents. "They inundated the household with the arts," he recalls. "They always took us to the ballet or the museum or to symphony concerts."

In turn, Moran taps inspiration across the spectrum, from Fats Waller (turning his stride-piano style into modern dance music with pop maverick Meshell Ndegeocello) to Brahms to hip-hop pioneer Afrika Bambaataa. He named his Gangsterism composition series after a word in a painting by neo-expressionist Jean-Michel Basquiat. His superlative 2010 album Ten includes a rumination over a buzzing loop of Jimi Hendrix feedback, while another album features a track responding to the cadence of a woman speaking Turkish on the phone.

Most of these conceptual flights wouldn't click without the combustible interplay of his trio, comprising bassist Tarus Mateen and drummer Nasheet Waits. "It's like an amoeba—it keeps shifting its form, but the chemistry never changes," Moran says. "They're not hampered by gravity. It took a long time for me to get used to them."

Moran, who's worked with artists from Cassandra Wilson to Charles Lloyd, adds of the Bandwagon, "It prepped me for situations where I'd play with Wayne Shorter, who's also of this mind-set, where he'd say, 'Jason, you can look at all the music, and we might just play one measure of the music, and then we just go swimming.'" ***

Jump the Gun

Banded Together

Can't make it to Coachella this year? Native East Coasters Maxwell Tousseau and Casey and Nick Crescenzo of the Dear Hunter ensure that New Englanders aren't left out in the cold. Before gracing the California stage alongside Arctic Monkeys, Mazzy Star, M83 and other trendy troupes, the group brings its prog-rock edge to Paradise Rock Club. Tune in on Jan. 18, when the band plays music off its latest effort, The Color Spectrum.

It'll Grow on You

Branching Out Green is the zeitgeist's favorite color. Innovators in every industry are reimagining society and the environment as collaborators rather than antagonists, and the art world is no exception. Nature's bounty becomes an artist's medium as Binh Danh, Paula Hayes, Tim Knowles and the Washington D.C.–based Workingman Collective bring plant-based works to gallery walls at the Massachusetts College of Art and Design. The Sandra and David Bakalar Gallery sees a change in scenery as Verdant sprouts Jan. 30–March 10. Lindsey Canant

Total Fabrications

Fashion Victim

The plot of Alex Gilvarry's From the Memoirs of a Non-Enemy Combatant intially reads like a tale cut from the same cloth as The Devil Wears Prada. But the devil in this story is more likely to wear camouflage and army boots. Mistaken for a terrorist, Gilvarry's fledgling apparel designer must prove his innocence (while fighting to look fabulous). The first-time novelist and Cambridge native stops by the Harvard Book Store on Jan. 19. Kyle Wright

WRITERS' BLOC

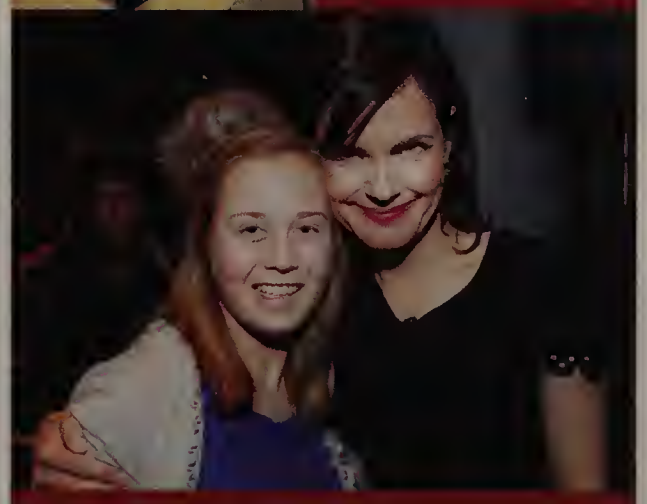
Philistines at the Gates

Bibliophiles and bookworms had reason to celebrate at the Hometown Authors Reception, a book fair to benefit ReadBoston cohosted by Hizzonnah Tom Menino and the Hotel Commonwealth.

Among the authors crowding the ballroom were home-run hitter Dennis Lehane, the wildly talented Marianne Leone Cooper (with her Oscar-winning husband, Chris), ubiquitous party boy Ben Mezrich (with his shoe-crazy wife, Tonya), photographer-to-the-stars Mike Casey (with his babe-a-licious blonde wife, WBZ-TV Channel 4 anchor Lisa Hughes), history buff Bill Martin (with the flawless Chris), reporter-turned–detective-fiction writer Hank Phillippi Ryan (with her husband, éminence grise Jonathan Shapiro), crime writer extraordinaire Casey Sherman, TV chef Mary Ann Esposito, author and Buffalo Tom frontman Bill Janovitz, and so on and so forth down the best-seller list. Other attendees included literary agent to the rich and famous Ike Williams, City Hall dandy Tony Nunziante, rakish restaurateur Garrett Harker, First Lady of Boston Angela Menino, and First Lady of Red Sox Nation Stacey Lucchino, who mixed and mingled with the writers, and more importantly, bought copies of their books.

While the cause of literacy was being advanced, none of the authors got writer's cramp, despite signing ceaselessly, although they did need runners to fetch them sustenance, liquid and otherwise.

Quote of the evening: "My husband's only here to drink. He won't buy books because he loves his Kindle so much."



Lisa Hughes, Dennis Lehane and Hank Phillippi Ryan at the ReadBoston event

Bill Janovitz at the Read-Boston event

I Know What Happens Next, and You Don't!

Who isn't a sucker for intrigue, sex and plummy English accents? That and period costumes have helped make Downton Abbey the most popular series to date on WGBH's Masterpiece Theatre.

The melodrama has a rabid following, including many members of The Ralph Lowell Society—the big shots who give big money to the station and who descended upon its studios like Twihards when it hosted a Preview Party and reception featuring star Elizabeth McGovern and executive producer Gareth Neame.

On hand were Masterpiece Theatre head honcha Rebecca Eaton, station president Jon Abbott, Cambridge philanthropists Graham and Ann Gund, arts supporters Cokie and Lee Perry, Back Bay bad boys Tony Corey and CJ Menard, culture vultures Jeffrey and Jane Marshall, the delightful Marjie Kargman, snazzy dresser DuncanRhys Liancourt, and the requisite number of tote-bag–toting faux intellectuals, like the first two people to ask questions during the Q&A, which later prompted one 'GBH bigwig to say: "I felt like yelling, 'Harvard Extension School is that way!'"

"I'm pretty sure my neighbors all think I'm this super kinky howler now."

After a sneak peek at season two and the aforementioned Q&A, cocktails were served in the lobby, followed by an elaborate dinner for the major players set in a reasonable facsimile of the dining room at Highclere Castle, where the series is filmed.

Three fun facts learned during the evening:

1) Gareth Neame's grandfather, Ronald, directed Dame Maggie Smith in her 1969 Oscar-winning performance in The Prime of Miss Jean Brody.

2) In England, Downton Abbey airs on ITV immediately following The X Factor.

3) Elizabeth McGovern can rock a pair of stilettos like nobody's business.

Contest of the Month

At a holiday party, a well-known TV reporter was talking about how she offers foster care to shelter dogs as a way of fulfilling her jones for canine companionship. Recently, she had a beagle that bayed incessantly.

"I'm pretty sure my neighbors all think I'm this super kinky howler now."

The first reader to correctly identify her will win an Improper Bostonian T-shirt, which you can wear while walking your dog, or having kinky sex—it's entirely up to you. ✖✖✖

The IMPROPER

Sausage Party

Last week, I dropped by Jamaica Plain's excellent Scottish pub, the Haven, for their annual Burns Supper. To the uninformed, this is a dinner commemorating poet Robert Burns, the Bard of Ayrshire, best known in this country as the man responsible for the vaguely comprehensible lyrics of "Auld Lang Syne." Burns also famously wrote a poem about haggis. Sure, chopped innards stuffed in a sheep's stomach lends itself to jokes (e.g. "Look, that Rimas guy wrote another weird editor's letter." "Ugh, I'd rather eat a haggis."). But while there are many misconceived sausages in this world—I cough pointedly in the direction of the Slim Jim—haggis isn't one of them. It's an entirely dignified food with an image problem. Like jerked chicken.

Entertainment's a big part of a Burns Supper. Poetry recitations, deafening Highland pipes, children dancing on swords… my usual Monday night, actually. But unlike in my private milieu, the singing was beautiful, not punitive, and the conversation never devolved into aimless rants about sausages. The loveliest Burns tradition, however, is when a gentleman delivers a "Toast to the Ladies." As well as being a haggis enthusiast, Burns was an avid lecher who wrote passionately about women. In the spirit of his "Red, Red Rose," then, I propose a toast to the ladies of Boston: Long may you indulge the men of this city. For without you, the world is less attractive than chopped innards in a sheep's stomach.

TAKING STOCK

SAYING BOSTON lacks a late-night food scene is like saying we have a shortage of rodeos. The difference is there's an audience for the former. Lamenting the lack of options over post-shift cocktails, O Ya chefs Mark O'Leary and Yukihiro Kawaguchi dreamed up the idea for Guchi's Midnight Ramen, and together with coworker Tracy Chang, they launched the pop-up on Jan. 16. Now the trio spends their days off waking at dawn to make noodles for night owls. It's a passion project O'Leary compares to another labor of love. "It's like when your mother gave you warm milk and cookies," he says. "It's soul satisfying." NICK ALTSCHULER

Objects of Desire

Elaine Hsieh and Catharine Sweeney had traditional caramels down pat when they decided to add a little more passion to their project. The entrepreneurial duo, owners of confectionary startup EHChocolatier, recently cooked up a new caramel that features tangy passion fruit paired with white chocolate for a candy that's creamy and bright. So why grab a heart-shaped box when it's what's on the inside that counts?

REDESIGN STARS

Old favorites get new looks.

AT UPSTAIRS ON THE Square, the spotlight is on Susan Regis, now that Steve Brand has left to become a personal chef. Regis is helming the kitchen, and she's finding new inspiration in what she calls a "treasure trove" of recipes from UpStairs' early days. Regis plans to interpret dishes "through my sensibilities as an homage to UpStairs at the Pudding," the restaurant's first incarnation, founded some 30 years ago. Each month, the menu will feature 10 plates from history, dishes surprisingly in synch with today's trends, like tagliatelle with veal kidney, fontina and wild mushrooms.

AT THE BEACON HILL BISTRO, Josh Lewin, who served as sous chef under Jason Bond, now owner of Bondir, has been promoted to the position of executive chef.

MILTON'S DINING SCENE is getting an upgrade: Josh Ziskin, chef/owner of La Morra in Brookline, is overhauling 88 Wharf. Working with the current owners, Ziskin will serve as executive chef and add an Italian influence to the predominantly American bill of fare. An oyster bar is also a possibility, says his wife and partner, Jen Ziskin.

IT'S UNCLEAR IF Fenway-based Tasty Burger will open an outpost in Somerville soon—nothing's been signed yet—but when a new T.B. is unveiled, expect a full liquor license to be part of the package. What cocktails pair well with a burger? Bartender extraordinaire Joy Richard, of the affiliated Citizen Public House, suggests the robust flavors of whiskey and Scotch mixed in classics like a Manhattan or an Old-Fashioned. "Of course, red wine never hurts with a burger," she adds.

TAKING IT TO THE STREETS

To say that chef Patricia Yeo had a rough start to 2011 would be an understatement. After her well-reviewed Ginger Park suddenly closed in the South End in late 2010, she considered returning to New York before ultimately landing at Harvard Square's Om. Initial criticisms abounded, and while making the restaurant and lounge her own has been a slow process, she believes it's yielded positive results. "It's never easy to enter somewhere that's already established, but we're getting there," Yeo says. "Right now I'm focused on getting everything set at Moksa, and then we'll start to make some changes to Om." Those changes, she hints, will result in much-needed renovations and updates in the kitchen and lounge. "There is a sense of a new beginning."

"THERE IS A SENSE OF A NEW BEGINNING"

Moksa, the hyped Pan Asian street-food spot she's been readying since the fall, promises a more immediate return to form. The enormous 8,500-square-foot space is industrial in design and straightforward in execution. Many will remember the ornate $380,000 curved wood ceiling of Ginger Park, but here it's all concrete floors and comfortable tables. "Do you know how many bowls of $14 noodles you have to sell to make up for a ceiling like that?" she says. "I wanted the food to be the focal point, not the design." Naga, an adjoining cocktail lounge, will share a kitchen but have its own entrance. There's also an event space, large enough to host a 150-person wedding reception, but sufficiently intimate for Yeo to teach cooking classes.

"It's like Ginger Park on steroids," Yeo says. "Our menu is diverse enough that I can use traditional ingredients, like chicken hearts, without scaring people away." There'll be plenty of her handmade noodle dishes, like the famous dan dan mein (the star of Ginger Park's menu) and steaming bowls of ramen, plus an array of meats charred on custom-built grills. Nothing on the menu tops $15, save for the reservation-suggested prix fixe she'll serve at the eight-person communal chef's table. Citing the impressive number of vegan, gluten-free and vegetarian dishes, Yeo is confident that, here, there's something for everyone. KYLE WRIGHT

PLACE SETTINGS

Milestones in a relationship often happen at bars and restaurants. Here's a handy guide on where to go for the momentous moments in your love life.

THE PICKUP

FASHIONABLY LATE THURSDAYS AT THE LIBERTY HOTEL

Models loll on platforms, music pervades throughout and the air drips with pheromones. You're already seeing and being seen, so looking for love is natural. (Gay alternate: Epic Saturdays at the House of Blues.)

THE FIRST DATE

SILVERTONE BAR & GRILL

It's hip, inexpensive and the no-pressure menu keeps things relaxed. Plus, if you run out of conversation, you can comment repeatedly on the steak tips' generous portion size. (Gay alternate: Geoffrey's.)

THE ALL-IMPORTANT THIRD DATE

BISTRO DU MIDI

Seduction and linguini don't mix (too damn sloppy). Skip the North End and opt for neatly presented Provençal dishes. And, despite the inevitable howls of protest and hand gesticulations, French is still sexier than Italian. (Gay alternate: Stella.)

THE MEET-THE-PARENTS DINNER

EASTERN STANDARD

You want somewhere mom can order a good seared salmon and dad, if he picks up the check, doesn't feel exploited. Plus, the cocktail program is a lifesaver in the event they keep bringing up how much better looking the ex was. (Gay alternate: Union Bar & Grille.)

THE REINVIGORATE-A-FLAGGING-RELATIONSHIP DATE

LOLITA COCINA & TEQUILA BAR

It's dark, the drinks are strong and other people will flirt with you. But go light on the nachos. Passion is not born from a belly full of queso fundido. (Gay alternate: Jacque's.)

THE PROPOSAL

L'ESPALIER

Share the duck, then pop the question before the cheese tray arrives. Even if things don't work out, you'll always have the memory of dessert chef Jiho Kim's compressed Asian pear in white chocolate. (Gay alternate: UpStairs on the Square.)

THE BREAKUP

FASHIONABLY LATE THURSDAYS AT THE LIBERTY HOTEL

It's so noisy and crowded, no one will notice a scene. Plus, you have a perfect setup for a rebound. (Gay alternate: Dbar, preferably during Showtune Tuesdays.)

Dan Watkin

Our House Blend is slow-roasted. So it's really a house-of-your-dreams blend.

Complete Package

Carving out the two hours needed for a spa appointment can leave you more stressed out than any massage can cure. To make the schedule-juggling worth it, you need to multitask. Our favorite package? Pyara Spa and Salon's "the Usual Please," which packs a month's worth of services into a half-day.

ELEMENTAL BODY MASSAGE: Most deep-tissue massage is hardly relaxing, even though its pressure is precisely what tight muscles need. This one gets the job done, and lulls you to a near-sleep state—thanks to deep-breathing techniques and alternating medium-pressure and light strokes.

ELEMENTAL NATURE FACIAL: A choice of aromatherapy oils kicks the facial off, followed by a lengthy foot massage, steam-based extractions, an invigorating green alfalfa mask and more face-and-neck massage.

FOOT-RELIEVING PEDICURE AND MANICURE: Using the weight of your feet to aid massage—which includes a combination of reflexology and lymphatic draining—the staff rub your toes with cinnamon-based products to help circulation while doling out advice on everything from yoga sandals to meditation tips. Don't bypass the glitter-charged Nicky Minaj line of OPI polishes.

MAKEUP AND HAIR TOUCH-UP: Avoid looking like you've been to the spa at all with a complimentary finishing touch by the salon's makeup artists, who use Aveda's mineral powders and lip glosses. For good measure, request a douse of Hair Polish, which wipes away any evidence of your treatments from your tresses. ALEXANDRA HALL

Cuppow $8, cuppow.com

It's a hipster's dilemma: You can turn your canning jar into a drinking glass, but you can't take your drinking glass on the go. Somerville-based engineers Aaron Panone and Joshua Resnikoff had been considering that predicament when they dreamed up CUPPOW, their eco-conscious answer to disposable cardboard cups and over-priced travel mugs. The stiff, BPA-free plastic lid fits most wide-mouth jars and forms a leak-proof seal when screwed beneath a standard canning band. Hot beverage sippers, remember—glass heats up fast. Hopefully Panone and Resnikoff will come out with a protective sleeve. So as to keep with the theme, may we suggest something in a tattoo motif?

IF THE SHOE FITS

I'M LOOKING FOR CINDERELLA! I found one very high-end designer shoe on Boylston Street in front of the Joseph A. Bank store the week before Christmas. It's a platform heel and the full pair retails for over $1,000. If you describe the shoe and can verify the size, we can meet to reunite the pair.

I lost my idea journal and phone on the T, but really, I only care about the journal. I just want my writing back. It's a pocket-sized, blue-green hardback with a Japanese design on the cover. My handwriting is super tiny and messy, so you'll probably assume it belongs to an insane Smurf. Please help! Blue without you

To a very pathetic man:

You felt like calling me a bitch this morning, and I'm not sure why. Did you think it would solve your morning commute? You were at a stoplight, and I was simply crossing the intersection at an appropriate time. To the elitist drones of society—Go f yourselves!

Drink of the Moment

FLIP CUP

NAME: Matsutake Flip. PRICE: $11.

EASILY CONFUSED WITH: "Matsuzaka Flip"—the moment Boston's tide of goodwill turned against Dice-K.

MASTERMIND: Rob Hoover, formerly of UpStairs on the Square and the Gallows.

TASTING NOTES FROM CHEF DRAGHI: "Not unlike a coniferous forest in spring" and reminiscent of Blis bourbon barrel maple syrup.

IN LAYMAN'S TERMS: Sweet, earthy and slightly nutty with a dry finish.

INGREDIENTS: Dry marsala wine, honey simple syrup, organic duck egg, two-month-aged bourbon-Matsutake tincture.

MUSHROOM FACTS: Matsutake are pine mushrooms found on forest floors. They're carefully foraged from the wild, and their limited availability makes them a culinary delicacy.

GARNISHED WITH: Nutmeg, torched Matsutake sliver.

THEY CONSIDER IT A SPIN ON: Eggnog.

FOR DATE NIGHT: Cozy up to the intimate bar and enjoy rustic items from Erbaluce's enoteca menu.

Q&A

Back in Action

Nick Carter sold more than 130 million albums with the Backstreet Boys. Now he's released his second solo album, I'm Taking Off. Carter plays Paradise Rock Club on Feb. 6.

How does performing solo compare to doing big arena shows?
It allows me to get close with the fans and get personal with them, instead of having them see from the nosebleed sections. I can touch their hands and stuff.

Doesn't it shrink the production value?
I felt that it was important to put costumes in it, give it a theme. It's a spacey-type theme. Me and my band are arriving from outer space and then kind of take off. I come out with a space helmet and space suit. It's really cool. Everything has come from my mind. It had to be entertaining. The last time I did a solo record, I just got up in front of a mike and sang. It was boring.

What are some of the creative things you've done to spread the word?
YouTube is really cool. I direct my own videos, and I've been able to get a big following. I was just on Dr. Phil talking about all the things I've gone through in my life.

Will you perform any BSB classics?
Oh, yeah. You've got to take care of the fans. We do "I Want It That Way" and four or five others. We do a rendition of "Larger Than Life" mixed with Kool & the Gang's "Fresh."

What was it like playing Fenway Park?
It was surreal. It's just massive and crazy. Sharing it with the New Kids was the best part. You could see on their faces how happy they were.

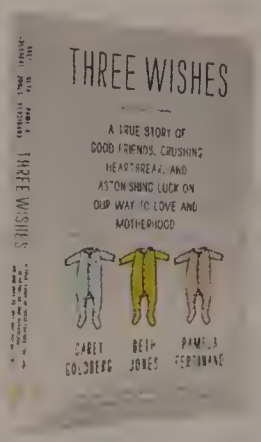
FERTILE GROUND



A true tale on the pursuit of motherhood

THE AUTHORS, THREE successful women journalists in their 30s, recount the winding road to family. To get there, they roam romantically, looking avidly for potential dad material more than for love or marriage. In alternating, chatty chapters that swim smoothly together, we meet the men they pursue and to whom they offer the tricky proposal of no-strings fatherhood.

As time passes and real needs deepen, the women increasingly hope for genuine connections that could weave an actual family tapestry. Their men tend to be good guys: athletic, somewhat solitudinous, remarkably game. Understandably, when offered ambiguously demanding fatherhood to be lived out at a somewhat chilly distance, they hesitate and cogitate. Meanwhile, ever ready as Plan B, there's sperm donor No. 8282.

The stories and the flow of their relationships are riveting, and the couples, touchingly, deepen their bond when there's a a troubled fetus or a miscarriage. All three go through very curly times, commitments, withdrawals and paternal hesitations. But when baby and commitment come together after adventure and stoicism and loss, the reportage is maternally, and gratefully, rhapsodic. ✖✖✖

FROM PAGE 188: We took Liliana to see the Disney film Brother Bear, and it had quite a few phantasmagorical, psychedelic scenes of the northern lights. The lights even lift up the central character and transform him into a bear. Afterward, I asked Sprax whether the lights had produced any magical effects on him. He had finally seen them for the first time on his Alaska trip, out on a remote glacier.

"The lights gave me an intense feeling of luck and prosperity," he said. "It was like: there were these things that I wanted, but I already had them, if I could just see it.'

"Like what things?"

"Like family..."

PHOENIX RISING

STYLE PROFILES Poolside at the eclectic Montelucia Resort & Spa

THE YEAR 2012 HERALDS centennials in spades: Fenway Park, the Titanic and, perhaps less well-known, Arizona. The state has some surprising draws for visitors: James Beard award–winning cuisine, vintage shopping, streets named for every imaginable synonym for "paradise." Winter-weary Bostonians, though, will most appreciate the Southwestern weather, in which donning sunglasses counts as adding a layer. For luxury and outdoor leisure in a dramatic setting, check out the rambling Montelucia Resort & Spa situated at the base of Camelback Mountain.

Phoenix Sky Harbor International Airport operates as a hub of US Airways and Southwest Airlines, so there are plenty of low-fare options for shuttling visitors to the country's ninth-busiest airport (but tops in friendliness, if all the signage is to be believed). After a six-hour flight, you'll arrive bleary-eyed (you could almost make it to Paris by air or Riverside by T in the same time frame). Perhaps the region's biggest downside is that it's so difficult to maneuver without being tethered to a rental car.

Though perky gate agents may ease the trek, Montelucia's onsite Joya Spa is where the real vacation begins. Signing up for one treatment gives visitors full access to the spa's facilities, including an outdoor pool/patio, whirlpool, steam room, snacks, a candle-strewn "whisper room," and bath and beauty products. Leaving with residual stress requires effort.

Once rejuvenated, you're ready to enjoy the outdoors. Lounge or dine poolside, or follow guides on morning hikes up the face of Camelback. (Warning: This is an all-limbs-required trek, not a stroll. And that "tree" you're about to grab for balance? It's a cactus.) For a more relaxing rendezvous with nature, ramble through the nearby Desert Botanical Garden. Many evenings, Montelucia's fires illuminate the outdoor dining areas, where stargazing and s'mores buffets are on the menu.

✓ Traveler's Checks

For those with an indoor itinerary, the summer months offer deeply discounted packages at the area's snazziest resorts.

Diners looking for south-of-the-border-inspired cuisine should visit Barrio Queen and the Fairmont Scottsdale Princess' La Hacienda.

MY HUMPS A landscape ideal for adventure

As a whole, the property's Spain-meets-Italy-and-they-all-go-to-Morocco concept is peculiar, but the plush luxury smooths out any contradictions. Just like the state itself, the resort seems to find its identity in the sprawling hodgepodge of a Southwest that's evolved to include more than just cowboy kitsch.

Phoenix has the raw material to be whatever it likes. An ultra-long growing season keeps cuisine fresh and local, while even expected imports like wine and olive oil are now produced in-state. This regional focus defines restaurants like Tuck Shop, a cozy eatery in a residential neighborhood led by Rhode Island–native DJ Fernandes. The kitchen emphasizes gourmet comfort food like beer-battered cheese curds ($4), chorizo-stuffed dates ($9), dry-rub skirt steak ($20) and drinks crafted with house-made tonic. Another fun hideaway is Central Avenue's Lux Central, a multifaceted coffee shop that, by night, features owner Jeff Fischer's creative cocktails.

The city's got art and design chops, too. Taliesin West, Frank Lloyd Wright's winter home and school, embodies the Arizonan impulse to pull the outdoors inside (rugged landscapes are big here, and with reason—just look out the window). Constructions by Wright's protégés dot the skyline, and Native American art aficionados converge on Phoenix's justly famous Heard Museum.

No matter the time of year, people in Phoenix are friendly, prices are reasonable, air conditioning is plentiful, and there's an itinerary for any taste. Eclectism is a big part of the appeal. Check it out in its current iteration, because, like Fenway, there's no telling what it'll look like at its next centennial. ✖✖✖

THE PRODIGIOUS SON

Tim Maslow transforms his dad's diner into a destination restaurant.

93 School St.,
Watertown
(617-923-4330)

TROUT CUISINE The rainbow trout with mushrooms is one of the stellar dishes at Strip-T's.

"I HATE MY FOOD," chef Tim Maslow declares sullenly. It's a surprising statement, considering the phenomenal fare Maslow creates at Strip-T's, a Watertown diner owned by his dad, Paul. The 27-year-old chef acquired his perfectionism during a five-year stint in David Chang's Momofuku restaurant empire in New York, where a culture of withering smack downs prevented culinary complacency. Since returning to the family business almost a year ago, Maslow has set his restless, critical eye on revamping the dinner menu while sticking to lunchtime standards for loyal customers. For someone whose cooking is motivated by anxiety, and even self-hatred ("I loathe myself—I get tired of a dish in a week,"), Maslow's inspired cuisine radiates confidence. Every dish is polished, a result of rigorous experimentation that's at once imaginative and elegantly restrained. In a word, Maslow's food is badass.

Take the buttermilk fried chicken ($15). Served with sautéed kale and a choice of grits or a crisp waffle, the dish is a conversation starter even before it reaches the table. That's because the leg is attached to a chicken foot planted like a flag on the plate, and, depending on your adventurousness as an eater, it's either saluting you or flipping you off. Always accompanied by nervous titters from diners on each of my three visits, it's the most popular item on a menu that changes according to seasonal availability and, more importantly, Maslow's whims. A quarter of a bird brined for three days and fried in chicken fat, the skin yields a satisfying crunch while the meat is steeped in juice. My favorite item, however, was a roast duck ($18), served as a special one night. It would've cost twice as much and tasted only half as good if ordered anywhere in Boston. A medium-rare breast with mahogany skin arrived draped over a square of fried turnip cake with the consistency of custard. Offset with sautéed turnips and radishes and a bright cranberry mostarda, the combination seamlessly melded New England ingredients with a dim-sum staple. Almost as good as the duck was the whole broiled rainbow trout ($18). Served butterflied, the fish's delicate sweetness was enhanced by a roasted chestnut sauce and thinly sliced hen-of-the-woods mushrooms.

Although there's no trumpeting of cultural influences on the menu, Maslow shows a deft hand with herbs, spices and staples usually associated with different ethnic cuisines. Seasonings taste precise yet uncontrived. For instance, he uses orange lentils and chili to make a savory base for his steamed P.E.I. mussels ($10-$14). Spicy chorizo and salty cotija cheese draw out the nutty quality of his roasted cauliflower ($7). The pickled carrot and daikon in his Japanese eggplant banh mi ($9) make for the tastiest veggie sandwich I've had in recent memory, while smoked miso and lemon aioli bring out the umami flavors of Strip-T's burger ($13).

B.N.'s Picks

Cauliflower

Banh mi

The only dish that disappointed was the chicken wings ($8), which came out rubbery in parts and charred in others. Texture aside, it was pretty standard fare. There's also room for improvement in the dessert and wine lists. Despite the fact that Strip-T's doesn't have a pastry chef, the kitchen turns out a decent chocolate cake, but it could use more options. Same for the wines by the glass, which seemed a random amalgamation. The beer selection, on the other hand, is a tribute to area breweries and includes Somerville's Pretty Things' Babayaga ($14) and Holyoke's High & Mighty Beer of the Gods ($5).

This is my first five-star review, and as a critic, I must admit I'm wary about giving it to Strip-T's. That's because the hole-in-the-wall almost makes too good a story—the hidden gem, the humble diner chef with a glamorous New York–trained pedigree, the father-son dynamic. But after multiple visits, the restaurant continues to impress. May Maslow keep loathing his food, as all evidence is to the contrary. ×××

ASK CHERYL

Q: IS THERE REALLY ANY BENEFIT IN APPLYING TOPICAL VITAMINS TO MY SKIN?

A: Well, yes and no. Anti-oxidant skin care products containing high levels of vitamins C, E, CoQ10 and green tea, are definitely one of the best ways to protect your skin from environmental toxins such as sunlight, air pollution and stress. These toxins cause free radical damage, which leads to wrinkles, sagging skin and discoloration. Cosmeceutical-grade anti-oxidants neutralize free radicals that would otherwise break down your skin cells and cause noticeable aging.

However, in order to be effective, these products must be formulated properly to penetrate deeply into the skin and should contain high levels of the proper ingredients. Buyer beware! Most skin care products on the market, including many expensive brands, do not contain high enough levels of anti-oxidants to produce the results that we would like to see.

Men and women of all ages who are concerned about the health and appearance of their skin should apply high-quality topical antioxidants. My recommendation, of course, is our SkinHealth brand: apply 20% vitamin C in the morning followed by a moisturizer enriched with additional anti-oxidants CoQ10 and vitamin E. In the evening, an 80% green tea serum in the evening will give your skin the vitamin cocktail that is one of the essential keys to vibrant, younger looking skin.

ABOUT FACE

Hideous skin lesions aren't all they're cracked up to be.

A FEW MONTHS AGO, I noticed a red mark on my cheek. When it refused to subside, I reluctantly concluded that I had to do something about it. Confronting medical mysteries, however minor, is always a fraught exercise. I have a few college classmates who somehow managed to escape medical school with MDs, and they're full of stories like, "Yeah, a guy came in with a sore heel. Turned out he had heel cancer." Then I ask whether they had to amputate, and the reply is, "No, no! He died."

So I'm a little apprehensive when I ask a physician's assistant to look at my mystery blotch. She's a friend who works in a dermatology office, and I'm hoping that she'll say I'm being paranoid and the only dangerous thing about me is my razor-sharp wit. Instead, she prescribes something called Carac and tells me to apply it to my face once a day, top to bottom.

In the interest of depriving my latent hypochondria of any new material, I don't ask too many questions about what Carac is exactly. Her basic explanation is that the active ingredient finds cancerous and precancerous spots on your skin and destroys them. So it's a tube of lotion that eats cancer and makes you look younger to boot. That's exactly the kind of hassle-free miracle cure I expect out of you, Kendall Square bio-nerds. You keep cranking out hits like that, and I'll keep pretending that it's purely in the interest of science when you breed rats with human ears growing out of their backs. Like you don't race those things around the lab.

I diligently apply the Carac for six days, and it's such a benign experience that I wonder if it's doing anything. Then, at around the week mark, the Carac begins its anticancer campaign in earnest, with multiple skirmishes erupting across the battlefield of my face. I develop sprawling red marks below my eyes, another by my mouth, plus the original blot on my cheek. "I'm so good-looking that I can afford to be a little less good-looking," I tell people who remark on my increasingly mangy complexion. You want to know a side effect of Carac? False bravado.

"I'm so good-looking that I can afford to be a little less good-looking," I tell people who remark on my increasingly mangy complexion.

By the eighth day, I know what it feels like to be a molting snake. As a bit of advice for would-be Carac users, you should try to plan your treatment for a time frame when you don't need your face. Like, if you ever wanted to take a two-week vacation in a cave in Uzbekistan. In my case, my mug was rounding into a festive explosion of blotches and flakes just in time for New Year's Eve, so my scabrous visage is immortalized in a series of group photos. In several of the shots, it appears that a nicely dressed band of partygoers decided to ring in the New Year in the company of a severely frostbitten baboon.

My regimen is supposed to run 10 days, and on Day Nine I break my self-imposed ban on Carac research. I quickly wish I hadn't. After a quick trip to Google, I learn that Carac is classified as a chemotherapy drug, which is a jarring semantic leap from the way I'd been thinking about it, which was as a groovy moisturizer with some pep in its step. Also, the Carac user feedback tends to be, let's say, less than glowing.

One particular guy's photo diary is truly unsettling. He only applied the cream between his eyebrows and his hairline, but evidently this guy's forehead spent 20 years working as an awning in Palm Beach. Icarus didn't have this much sun damage. By the third week, this gentleman was sporting a look that I'd call, "Normal lower face, forehead of the Predator." Assuming that the Predator just sat through an intense bout of microdermabrasion.

I consult my Carac-prescribing friend to ask how much worse I'll get, and she tells me to hang in there—a lot of people freak out and suspend the treatment once their faces start to flare up, thus undermining the whole endeavor. "These are people who have sun damage and spots all over their face in the first place," she says. "I want to say, 'Try to deal with it, because you look like crap anyway.' People are babies." It's safe to say that she subscribes to the Tiger Mom school of bedside manners.

Ultimately, I finish out my 10-day sentence and Sanofi Aventis' fluorouracil cocktail does its job. When circumstances dictate, I'll probably even use it again, though in the future I'll take my own advice and time the worst of the facial outbreak to coincide with a Carac friendly vacation. I hear Barrow, Alaska, is nice from mid-November to mid-January. It might be cold, but it's dark 24 hours a day. ✖✖✖

LIVING IN HARMONY

Musings on music

I GREW UP IN MY grandfather's house in the days before television. He had big radios and a large windup Victrola and hundreds of records, mostly opera. I have a photograph of my grandfather dressed as Pagliacci, in his clown suit, in a student performance in the North End in 1905. He used to sneak into the theater on Washington Street when he was a kid to hear Caruso, the greatest tenor in the world. My mother would play the piano for him on Sunday mornings, and he would sing arias from Norma and La Bohème. Later, I remember my uncles dancing around the living room singing to Sinatra, "Just found joy, I'm as happy as a baby boy, when he's found a brand new choo choo toy, 'cause I found my sweet Lorraine."

In the middle of the last century, jazz was big in Boston. I remember going to Storyville under the Copley Square Hotel on a double date when I was 17. We had gone to a movie and to the jazz club afterward—it was pretty racy. We sipped ginger ales and listened to George Shearing play the piano. My friend, the other guy in the foursome, was driving his father's Oldsmobile. His daddy was rich, as the old song said, but I was nervous about the check. And when it came, I had a feeling that good-night kisses were probably not in the cards. There was something called "cover charge," and I had about $2 in my corduroys. The owner came over when he learned that we couldn't scrape it together.

"I never heard of something called 'cover charge,'" I said.

"This is a great lesson for you, kid," the owner said. "Always read the fine print, and understand it before you walk in the room." The owner was the jazz impresario George Wein, creator of the Newport Jazz Festival. Every time I hear Shearing playing "The Folks Who Live on the Hill," I thank Wein for his advice. I also remember my date saying, "Don't bother walking me to the door. From now on I only date college guys."

It seemed all my friends loved jazz in college, and always wanted to go to New York to haunt Hickory House and Birdland. I only really loved jazz with vocals, and still get transported listening to Chet Baker on his horn, sprinkled with his singing in his tortured, bourbon-stained tones. Listen to his version of "My Funny Valentine" to see what I mean.

My real preference, though, is for Broadway show tunes, from Cole Porter's Out of This World to today's The Book of Mormon. But I have two sons to bring me up to date in pop music. My oldest boy managed a ska band, Kitch 'n Sync, in the 1980s, during the great early days on Landsdowne Street and when the Paradise featured such acts as U2 and the Cars. He also worked as a bouncer, and the experience was better than any graduate school. Drunk or disgruntled club crawlers would sometimes wait outside to fight with the employees after closing. "One night," my son said, "I saw a guy being tossed through the window of his own VW. 'Careful driving home,' one of the bouncers called to him. I knew then that I'd always love music, but that maybe the years of living dangerously should be put behind me."

My second son was the lead singer in a heavy metal band in New York. It was called Heavy Floe. My kid couldn't really sing, but he could write revolutionary lyrics, and he could scream at the top of his lungs. The band played a lot in the Meatpacking District below 50th Street, and, as far as I know, they never went on before 1 am. In heavy metal, anything goes. Shows on St. Patrick's Day often included a little person dressed as a leprechaun who was tossed into the crowd at crucial moments.

"When we started," my son told me, "I was terrified, and I figured I better come up with some gags to distract people from the fact that I couldn't sing. Once we performed with me in full nun's habit. I didn't know going in that it weighed 40 pounds and the room was packed and hot. After the first set, I passed out and fell off the stage. When I came out of it, I was told we got the biggest applause we ever had." Heavy Floe played at joints like CBGB, Continental and Cafe Au Go Go, performing such classics (he's my son) as "F L.A." ("San Andreas hear my plea, dump L.A. into the sea,"), "Chac-Mool," (a mysterious sort of Toltec statue) and "Naughty Little Monkey."

At a show at Hogs 'n' Heifers, an infamous biker bar, my son and his bandmates were terrified they'd be beaten or killed by the Mongols. "Go over the top, I thought," said my son. "So, first show, I wore a swine's head. Really. We had it done by a butcher, disgusting. But the bikers went wild. They knew crazy when they saw it. And we were in. Every time we played, I never paid for a beer. The bikers would yell, 'Frankenswine rules!'"

Of course, my wife and I never got to experience the show. We were at Symphony Hall that night. They played Mahler. ×××

TIME OUT

The Celtics championship window is now closed.

A LARGE CONTINGENT OF local sports fans couldn't have cared less if professional basketball returned this year. Now that the Celtics are back, many haven't deigned to notice. The Boston Bruins earned the attention of the casual viewer with their Stanley Cup victory. (And it feels like their championship celebration is still in full swing.) But contrary to the hockey converts, I still believe NBA action is fantastic.

That was right up until I saw the Celtics age right before my eyes. Yes, I get it. They're not exactly the youngest team, but that's why I figured the shortened season would benefit these oldies but goodies.

The current Celtics team is full of well-known commodities. This group has been together since Danny Ainge really took charge in 2007 and assembled an intimidating team (thanks to an assist from former Celtics teammate and ex–Minnesota Timberwolves president Kevin McHale). But now, as the second Big Three, with a collective age of 105, gets pushed to the side by a young strong-headed Rajon Rondo, the aging Celtics appear to be losing their battle with Father Time. In case you were wondering, Father Time is undefeated.

After sizing up the competition, Ainge was allegedly the busiest GM in the NBA during the lockout, trying to find trading partners in an effort to win another championship with or without his Hall of Fame trio intact.

The creakiest of the stars has been the man they used to call "the Kid," Kevin Garnett. Once one of the most intimidating low post players in the game, Garnett is still barking at the competition. The problem is there's no bite. His leaping ability—he reportedly could touch the top of the backboard in his prime—hasn't totally disappeared, but it's not there every night. So sure, his lips are still moving, but his legs are lifeless.

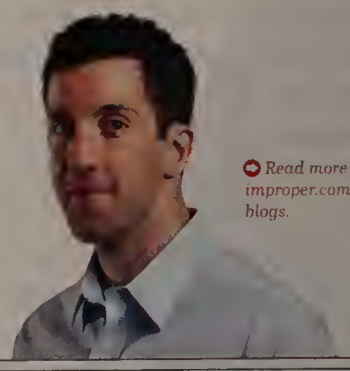
It can be hard to watch him play sometimes, as he was such a warrior on the court. He was the Celtics' heart and soul. He was the key to their defensive dominance. (Though he still has that sweet 18-foot jumper.)

Believe me, I'm not comparing KG to Jermaine O'Neal, a big man who's a year and a half younger but has even less left in the tank. Garnett still has energy to give. He's just not at that all-star level we're used to seeing. He's a quality starter; and for today's Celtics that's not good enough.

This season began in a predictable fashion. We figured the Celtics would struggle a bit, especially with Pierce not 100 percent healthy. But after starting 4-3, the team dropped five in a row, the longest losing streak in the current Big Three era. Hopes for championship glory soon became contemplations on how to rebuild and start over.

There isn't a day that goes by when people don't ask me, "What should the Celtics do?" I don't know what to say. I applauded Ainge's efforts to get Chris Paul—arguably the best point guard in the game—for Rondo, our rising star. Maybe Paul would've gotten another big name—say Orlando center Dwight Howard—to join the fray next year. But nothing happened.

The Celtics are in a tough spot. I think they'll ride out the year with the old vets and wave Garnett and Ray Allen good-bye when their contracts expire at the end of the season. But Ainge has said he's willing to trade anyone if it means improving the team, and I like Ainge when he takes chances. Trading for Allen and Garnett was a gamble, and it paid off with a title. (Had a few Allen three-pointers fallen at the right time, we might be reminiscing about one or two more.)



However, this current run is over. What's left is to enjoy the game, which many of us still love, and hope Ainge can craft another winning plan soon. The NBA may be back, but I'm already missing championship basketball. ×××

FIT FOR TRIAL

Putting CrossFit through the paces

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

I FIRST HEARD OF CROSSFIT A few years ago. A friend in Denver discovered an online program that had him squirreled away in his basement for intense bouts of exercise. There were push-ups until his arms smoldered. Sit-ups until he feared his next rep would propel his lunch against the wall. There was talk of the Paleolithic diet, which has you eating like a caveman—someone with the life expectancy of 12, but the picture of health to some CrossFitters. Then there was the badge of honor known as rhabdomyolysis, a condition where you exercise so hard that your muscles disintegrate into your bloodstream and your urine turns the color of Dr. Pepper. It all sounded pretty cool.

Lately, ESPN2 has been televising the Reebok CrossFit Games on weekends, which is a genius bit of marketing. Normally that time is a refuge for sloth, when a man is free to lie on his couch with bedhead and one sock on, watching Paula Dean refry a donut. But with a quick flip in the wrong direction, suddenly you're watching a woman with a torso like a Roman chest plate ripping off sets of handstand push-ups. It's a wake-up call to step up your fitness, once you've watched all the new programming saved on the DVR.

With its increasing popularity—and Reebok's recent multimillion dollar investment—CrossFit gyms and programs have been growing in the area. After Reebok CrossFit Back Bay opened up down the street from the office, I took a free trial, as did 400 other people in the first nine days.

Before the workout, myself and about eight other curious participants learned the basics. The CrossFit program blends actions like running, lifting and plyometrics in an effort to improve all your physical attributes, from strength to stamina to speed to looking sexy. (That last part isn't in the brochure, but everyone's thinking it.) The workouts are varied, so you don't get stuck in a routine, and they can be adjusted to your fitness level. The main selling point is that CrossFit is done by both S.W.A.T. teams and housewives. And now by a grown man who sometimes still daydreams about being on a S.W.A.T. team.

They're like white-collar prison yards covered in IdeaPaint.

After a warm-up, we were put through a baseline workout of a 500-meter row, 40 air squats, 30 sit-ups, 20 push-ups and 10 pull-ups. Workouts are timed, which adds a competitive element, and our group winner was a professional lacrosse player who I feared was going to collapse on a nearby folding table. (In fairness, I think he forgot his inhaler.) Right behind him was a young woman experienced in CrossFit who didn't drop a bead of sweat and was ready for round two.

Intrigued, I visited CrossFit Fenway, and found immediate similarities between franchises. Bay windows give passersby a glimpse at proud athletes in action, and all CrossFits I've seen share the same spare, utilitarian aesthetic. They're like white-collar prison yards covered in IdeaPaint.

I wiggled my way into a midday workout at the busy outpost thanks to the affiliate owner, a CrossFit devotee who left his software job to open the gym almost three years ago. After the warm-up, we grunted through dead lifts—a fairly advanced exercise I haven't done in 10 years—and for the timed portion, or in CrossFit parlance, the WOD (workout of the day), we plowed through nine sets of nine wall bounces and nine box jumps. It was quick, but I had to push myself, which isn't something I normally do at the gym. Plus, in addition to being sweaty, I was a little cut and bloody, and it's a satisfying feeling when you have to remember to disinfect your scrapes and not the handles of your elliptical machine.

Overall, I'd recommend CrossFit to anyone looking to improve their fitness, but, good gravy, is it pricey. Membership options at the two gyms I visited range from $140 to $400 per month, and while performing dead lifts gives me strength, so does being financially solvent. But if my bank account were brawnier, I'd choose CrossFit over an expense like a personal trainer. The program feels effective, and there's that sense of camaraderie that makes exhaustion, pain and nausea so enjoyable.

The payout was the reminder that exercise is best when it's engaging, which is why my Denver buddy eventually crawled out of his basement to join a tennis league. Your greatest workouts are never going to happen on a machine with a TV strapped to it. What the program offers is results through variation, but we all need to find what works for us as individuals. ✖✖✖

ON HEADING BACK TO THE BIG GAME

5 SUPER BOWL QUESTIONS

Is This Real Life? I'll be honest: I didn't think this team had it in them. In fact, after three failed seasons, I started to wonder if Brady would ever make it back. But here we are again, 10 years since the first title, seven years since the last and still going strong. God, if only Eugene Chung could see us now.

BRAIN GAME Belichick won't win with style points.

Can the Pats Stop the Pass? The dumbest thing the Ravens did (aside from allow their kicker to drop acid at halftime) was run the ball far too much early on. They played right to the defense's strength and never found a rhythm. The Giants won't be as stupid, which means New England's hopes and dreams may rest on the shoulders of their shaky secondary. In related news: I'm terrified.

Gronk Play? Yes, Gronk. You play. And you play well. Whether you'll be 100 percent remains to be seen, but once the adrenaline and painkillers kick in, you'll be too hyped to care. And by then, I'll be far more worried about you killing a teammate with an errant Monster Spike than I'll be about your ankle.

Does Another Ring Make Brady the Best Ever? Well, look at it this way: With a victory, Brady ties Joe Montana and Terry Bradshaw for most Super Bowl wins by a quarterback. On top of that, Brady's already thrown 27 more career touchdowns than Montana and 88 more than Bradshaw. He's also thrown 24 fewer interceptions than Montana and 95 fewer than Bradshaw. In other words, yes. With a win, Brady will be the best, Jerry. The best!

Who Will Win? This marks the Pats seventh trip to the Super Bowl, and on paper, it's the toughest one to pick. That being said, of course I'm taking the Pats. I won't shed tears in victory like 2002, or fall into a weeklong depression in defeat like 2008—this time, I'm prepared for anything. But sticking with my prediction from last issue: I still think the Pats will win. You stay ready, Vinatieri.... You stay ready.

4 DATES TO WATCH

2/5: It's the day we've all been waiting for... Celtics vs. Grizzlies, baby! (Also, the Super Bowl.)

2/9: A rivalry is renewed as the Celtics host the Lakers. Just a heads up to all the ladies of Boston: Kobe is single again. PLEASE be careful.

2/12: Hey, Josh Beckett. Better get going on that juice cleanse. T-minus one week until pitchers and catchers report.

2/14: Take your valentine to the Garden, where the Bruins host the Eastern Conference-leading Rangers. Note: Tim Thomas plans to sit this game out as a statement against greeting card companies.

SEND FEEDBACK TO RICH@IMPROPER.COM AND READ MORE AT CSNNE.COM.

2 CONTROVERSIAL CALLS

BAILING ON BARACK Tim Thomas is a moron for skipping out on the White House trip. I know, it's a free country, so that's why I'm not suggesting we throw him in jail. I'm just saying it was a mistake. Speak out against the government 364 days a year, but that was the one day he should've sucked it up and taken one for the team.

SLEEPY SOX After perhaps the worst September in franchise history, the Sox made the controversial decision to do... absolutely nothing. Well, that's not true. They disgraced their manager, pushed out the GM and installed a nice little puppet regime. But in terms of the actual team? Nada. But hey, at least the Yankees didn't... oh right. Crap.

3 CELTIC THOUGHTS

Sophomore Special After a rough start, I was ready to write off Avery Bradley. But in Rondo's absence, he's proven that he not only has a place in this league, but also on this team. (As long as he never shoots another jumper for as long as he lives.)

The Captain's Back Earlier this season, Pierce was in such rough shape, I doubt he could have beaten Tommy Heinsohn down the floor. But as the year rolls on, The Truth continues to round into form, and in the process, he's nurtured the C's back to life. (Serious question: Is it me, or could the Celtics actually use Heinsohn on the boards?)

Pietrus Party I wasn't a big fan of the Mickael Pietrus signing, mostly because I never imagined he'd be healthy enough to play. But in his short time with the team, Pietrus has made an impact. He can shoot, he can defend, and he's crazy enough to inject some life into an increasingly boring locker room. He's so great, I'll even forgive him for being French.

1 ONE SOLID HALF

As I type, the Bruins are sitting pretty at the All-Star break. They lead the league in goals per game (3.5), are fourth in goals against (2.1) and are tied for second-most wins at 31. To Claude, Chiarelli and President Sea Bass: We salute you.

"There's a slice of the corporate world that's pretty greedy. But you can't misinterpret survival as greed."

Soroff On LIZ CLAMAN

The financial news anchor talks about CEO salaries, Warren Buffett and interviewing Diana Ross.

FOX BUSINESS ANCHOR LIZ CLAMAN, 48, was born and raised in Beverly Hills. She worked as a reporter and later an anchor in Ohio before joining WHDH-TV Channel 7 in Boston, where she served as a reporter and anchor for many years. She moved to CNBC as an anchor on several different programs where her guests included major financial figures and world leaders like Warren Buffett, Suze Orman and Steve Forbes. In 2007, she joined Fox Business Network, where she hosts Countdown to the Closing Bell and cohosts Fox Business. She is the author of The Best Investment Advice I Ever Received. Claman lives in New Jersey with her husband and two children.

Jonathan Soroff: Fox News—Fair and balanced?
Liz Claman: Well, I'm on Fox Business Network, and Fox News is number one, so they don't need any more praise from me. I'd rather push our fledgling network that's doing incredibly well, and yes, we're fair and balanced.

Biggest "get" of your career?
Warren Buffett. I landed the first long-form, live interview with him. I think Charlie Rose had done something taped, but Buffett notoriously didn't want to do interviews. And when you're that wealthy, you don't have to do anything you don't want to. But I worked it hard. I tuned out all the people saying he would never do it, and I picked up the phone and called him. He told me he was a fan of mine, which was interesting to me, because I really didn't have the typical business background.

Ever feel out of your depth?
There are a million moving parts to the stock and bond market, and it's only gotten more complicated. It's an effort every single day, even after 12 years as a financial journalist, to understand what's going on, whether it's Hungary's currency, or derivatives wildly gyrating. I go to the Liz Claman School of Business every day.

Is there one interviewee you didn't like?
Diana Ross, who has all kinds of business ventures, wasn't a nice person for me to interview. Maybe I caught her on a bad day, but she wasn't very pleasant. I think I caught Kenny G on a bad day, too. Celebrities sometimes can be very tough. But I understand if they hate the media.

Is Donald Trump a phony blowhard?
Not at all. What you see is what you get. I really didn't like a lot of the things he said about our president, but he's so super smart, and so much fun to interview, and he's never trying to be something he isn't.

Is Mayor Bloomberg the Grinch, or what?
I think he's a great mayor because he can't be bought. He shows up to everything. He cares deeply when he makes a mistake. He might not be warm and fuzzy, but he's busy and he's allowed to be that way. And I especially love how he doesn't hide his Boston accent.

Business mogul you most admire?
I guess someone like Howard Schultz, because he's changed the cultural landscape and people's behavior. People can't live without Starbucks. His business has become part of our lexicon, and he's changed the way people view a cup of coffee. But he's also a good person and a big dreamer, and he had people all along the way telling him to quit and he didn't. He cares about his employees.

Will the Occupy movement have lasting impact?
Lasting? I'm not sure. But it's definitely had an impact, because people are talking about it. We have 14 million unemployed people and a lot—not all—had to do with Wall Street bankers taking bets that went south. And the rest of us had to save them because we all have bank accounts. But I don't feel like the Occupy protestors ever got their message to gel effectively.

Ever benefited financially from tips, news or insight you got on the job?
I wish! We can't take big positions in anything. The one thing I've learned is that the stock market is the best thing going. Since 1929, the stock market has returned, on average, something between nine and 11 percent.

Has your red hair helped your career?
When I was a journalism student at Berkeley, the only redhead on-air was a woman on ESPN named Gayle Gardner. Tim Russert came to speak to us. I raised my hand and said, "How come there are no redheads on network news?" And he said, "Well, maybe you'll be the first one."

Is corporate greed as bad as everyone says?
There's a slice of the corporate world that's pretty greedy. But you can't misinterpret survival as greed. When you see the guys at the top making millions and salaries getting slashed or huge layoffs, that's not fair. But I think in most cases, the compensation for the guys at the top is connected to their performance.

Is executive compensation unfair?
It is if the company isn't making money, and if the stock isn't doing well. That said, some of the best CEOs I know can't get their stock prices to budge over the last couple of years, not because of the company's poor performance but because of headlines coming out of Europe.

What's your single favorite source for news?
For my purposes, The Wall Street Journal over and over again proves to be the first word in business. Online, Marketwatch.com, which I've been reading forever, is really solid. In fact, it's Warren Buffett's screen page.

How important are your looks to your career?
Very. It's TV, not radio. Especially for women, who are held to a different standard. I'm a big feminist, but if you don't want to be scrutinized in that way, you shouldn't be in this business. And another thing: No matter how beautiful you are, you can't be a dummy and do financial news.

Financial outlook for this year?
More optimistic for America, but now we're in this global economic maelstrom, so it's harder than ever to look into a crystal ball.

Three surefire ways to get rich in 2012?
Rob a bank. Marry money. And invest in "the kitty getting hugged by its mother" YouTube video. [Laughs.] In the end, there's no substitute for hard work and passion. ×××

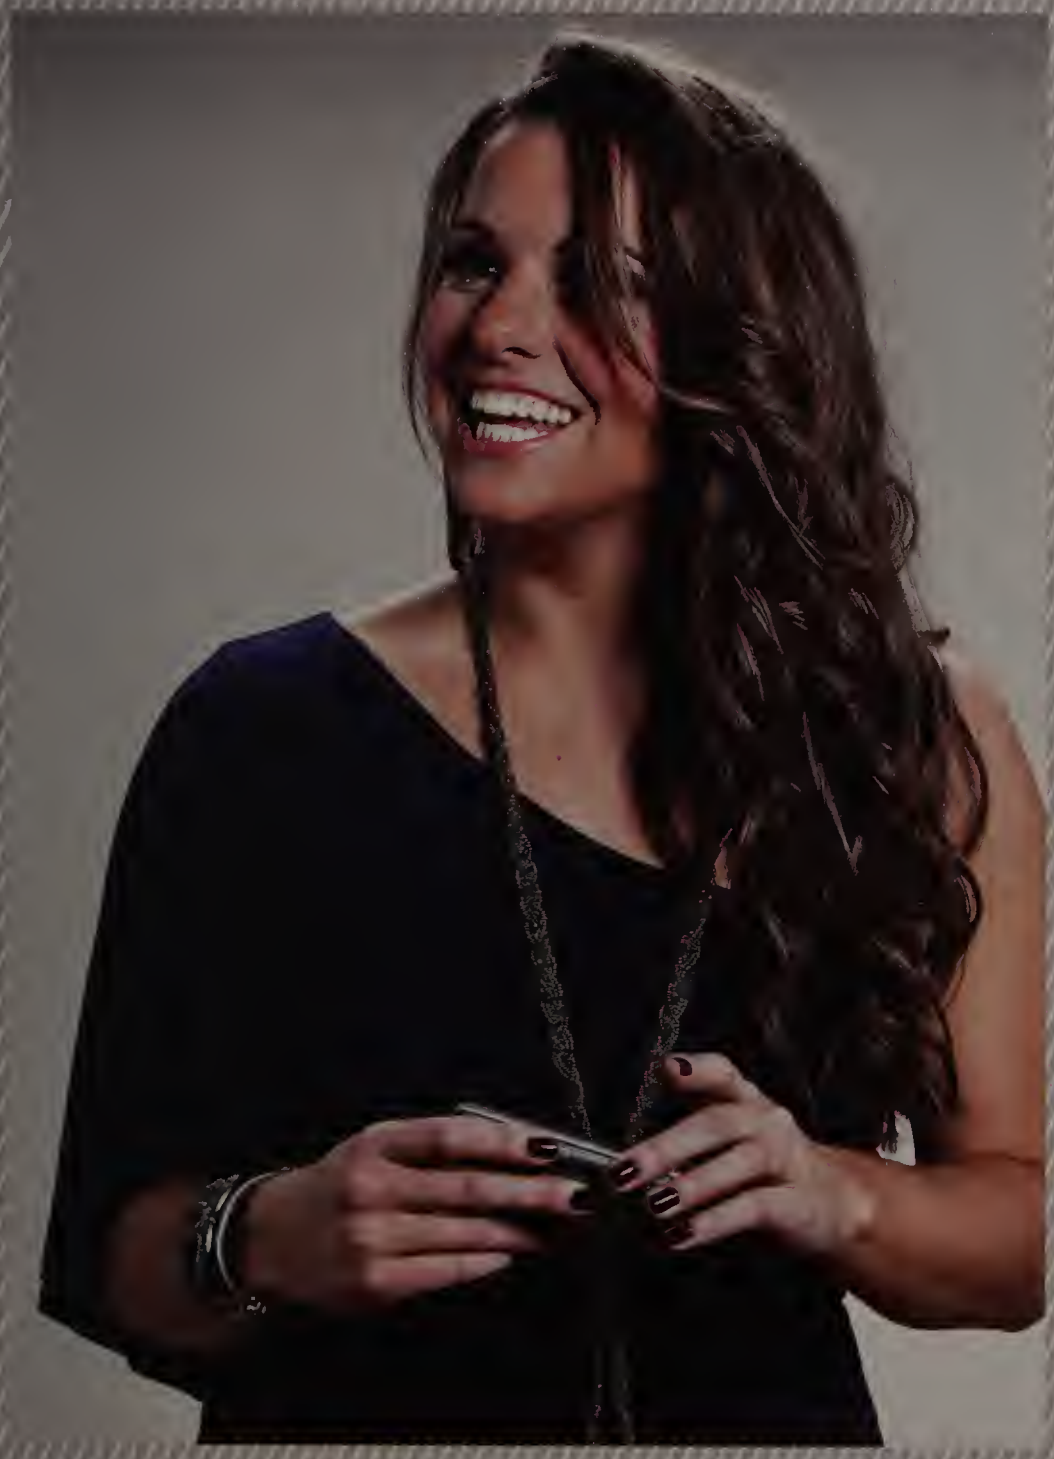
OUR ANNUAL ROUNDUP OF THE CITY'S 20 MOST DESIRABLE BACHELOR/ETTES

BY JONATHAN SOROFF | PHOTOS BY JESSE BURKE

There's too much time wasted on advising singles how and with whom they should pair off. This well-meaning malarkey is predicated on the idea that single means solitary, that coupling is an individual's raison d'être. But the 20 eclectic and attractive people in this article are proof that those who fly solo can reach great heights.

We compiled a guest list of some of the city's most accomplished, interesting, intelligent and attractive men and women who happen not to be currently attached. Just the sort of people you'd want at a swank cocktail party. So we threw one for them. On a recent wintry evening, Back Bay hotspot Forum served as the glamorous backdrop to a mixer for our superlative crew. Belvedere vodka cocktails and glasses of Moët in hand, our guests broke the ice, mingled and perhaps exchanged a phone number or two. And if the setting weren't elegant enough, our singles proved they were all exceedingly snappy dressers.

As always, the list is divided evenly by gender, and includes folk from different walks of life. (Although, turns out the two gay bachelors live in the same building, which kind of deflates the diversity.) As they all proved on that heady night at Forum, each of these ladies and gentlemen can walk into a crowded room and hold court—not that they're necessarily looking to meet Prince or Princess Charming. Or maybe they are. The point is, we're lucky to live in a city where you can meet such cool people over a well-mixed gimlet.



IT'S OUR PLEASURE TO INTRODUCE BOSTON'S MOST ELIGIBLE SINGLES, CLASS OF 2012.

James DiSabatino

CHIEF CHEESE GRILLER, ROXY'S GOURMET GRILLED CHEESE, 24

You might recognize him from The Great Food Truck Race on the Food Network, or because he made you a kick-ass sandwich from his Roxy's Gourmet Grilled Cheese truck. A Revere native with a thick Boston accent (which he admittedly and hypocritically dislikes in women), he's as unpretentious as they come. Like a character dreamed up by Ben and Matt, he felt out of place at Emerson, but his unconventional approach to life has paid off, and he'll soon be able to call himself a restaurant owner. A punk-music fan, this T-shirt-and-jeans guy will take a good burger over a four-star restaurant any day. One of his favorite ways to get to know someone is to people-watch with them. He has enough charm and charisma that, after a first date ended with a grease fire and ringing alarms, the girl still went with him on a second. Quirky in a quintessentially Boston way, Iceland is his favorite place, although the night of our mixer, he arrived straight off a 12-hour flight from Hawaii.

Erin McEvoy

MANAGER, BOSTON BRUINS FOUNDATION, 27

A dazzling smile and chestnut hair are merely two of her highly attractive traits, many of which have more to do with her character. As the coordinator of the Boston Bruins Foundation, she oversees the team's charitable efforts, and she's actively involved with the Boys & Girls Clubs, Spaulding Rehabilitation Hospital and the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation. Last year, she was named Nonprofit Planner of the Year by the BizBash Boston Readers' Choice Awards. A Cape Cod native, she's a beach bunny who loves tidal marshes, bonfires on the sand and every type of seafood. Easygoing and confident, she has an uncanny ability to make whomever she's talking to feel like the most important person in the world. When asked to get involved with a worthwhile cause, she can't say no, so she's sometimes overcommitted. A can-do attitude makes her an asset to any charity. Be forewarned: The worst thing a guy could do on a first date would be to cheer for the wrong team.

←Hugo Liu

CHIEF SCIENTIST, HUNCH.COM; TASTE RESEARCHER, MIT, 32

One of those people you notice instantly, if only for the rock 'n' roll hairdo and super-fly threads. Something about him screams staggeringly intelligent, which might be the Ph.D. from MIT, or the fact that he was a researcher at the MIT Media Lab and is an expert on artificial intelligence who works where technology intersects with style and taste. He reads The Economist cover to cover, created a cooking software program that allows users to browse recipes according to emotion (which earned him ink in The New York Times), and he's worked with a Scotch blender to create customized bottles of whiskey that induce Proustian memories. Born in Xi'an, China, and raised in Amherst, he cites Coco Chanel as his favorite philosopher. Despite the fact that he works in the highest reaches of tech, he considers online dating a waste of time. Lately, he's been serving as chief scientist at Hunch.com, which was recently acquired by eBay. A guy to watch, whether you want tips on couture or the hottest IPO.

Bill Stone INDUSTRY SOLUTION TIGER TEAM—RETAIL & CP INDUSTRIES, NORTH AMERICA, IBM, 43

This tech executive is the antithesis of what you'd expect from a boardroom veteran. Active in charities that range from Habitat for Humanity to the American Red Cross (he was a volunteer at Ground Zero after 9/11), he's also given his time to the Enkosini Wildlife Reserve's lion rescue program in South Africa (where he got to "play with lions after signing a waiver saying it was OK if I was lunch"). Spontaneous and adventurous, in the past year he's jetted off with only a few days' notice on surfing trips to Costa Rica, to sail and scuba-dive in the British Virgin Islands and hang-glide in Rio. He considers his best feature his yellow Lab, Cali, to whom he's devoted. An excellent cook and a lover of anything to do with the ocean, he's handy around the house, wears his heart on his sleeve and is a hopeless romantic.

Cairo Kironyo MAKEUP ARTIST, MAC COSMETICS, 25

It's almost a given that Catholic schoolgirls gravitate toward the forbidden fruit of cosmetics, but this MAC makeup artist took it to the next level. Gamine and gorgeous, her smile is as genuine as it is dazzling, and because she's been bartending for six years, she's not only the life of any party but can dish it as well as she takes it. An art lover, she also has a taste for painting, poetry and design. A Brockton native, she's at home in Boston's dining scene and boasts the entertaining skills of a fledgling Martha Stewart. Her idea of a great date involves "amazing conversation free of awkward silences," and her notion of a romantic get-away is Positano (or anywhere else on the Amalfi Coast). Bonus points for charming dimples.

Adam Beddie

STORE MANAGER
GRETA LUXE '10

A guy any mother would want her son to bring home: He's kind and charming with the sort of good looks that age well. He made a favorable impression on several people at our mixer due to his boyish appeal and urbane wit. Raised in Japan and Ogunquit (an odd combo), he went to New Orleans just in time to survive Hurricane Katrina, before starting over in Boston. Having worked for Saks Fifth Avenue, Bloomingdale's and departed Newbury Street boutique Stil, he's a natural to work at fashion mecca Greta Luxe as manager, where he spends his days making women feel beautiful. One disarming physical characteristic: His eyes change color. One disarmingly charming anecdote. He once explained a first date that was going [illegible] until the waitress approached the table with a cake singing "Happy first date!" to the tune of "Happy Birthday." Unwilling to be outed and quick to laugh, he [illegible] you're impressing when your best friend says "I think I [illegible] waiters on you."

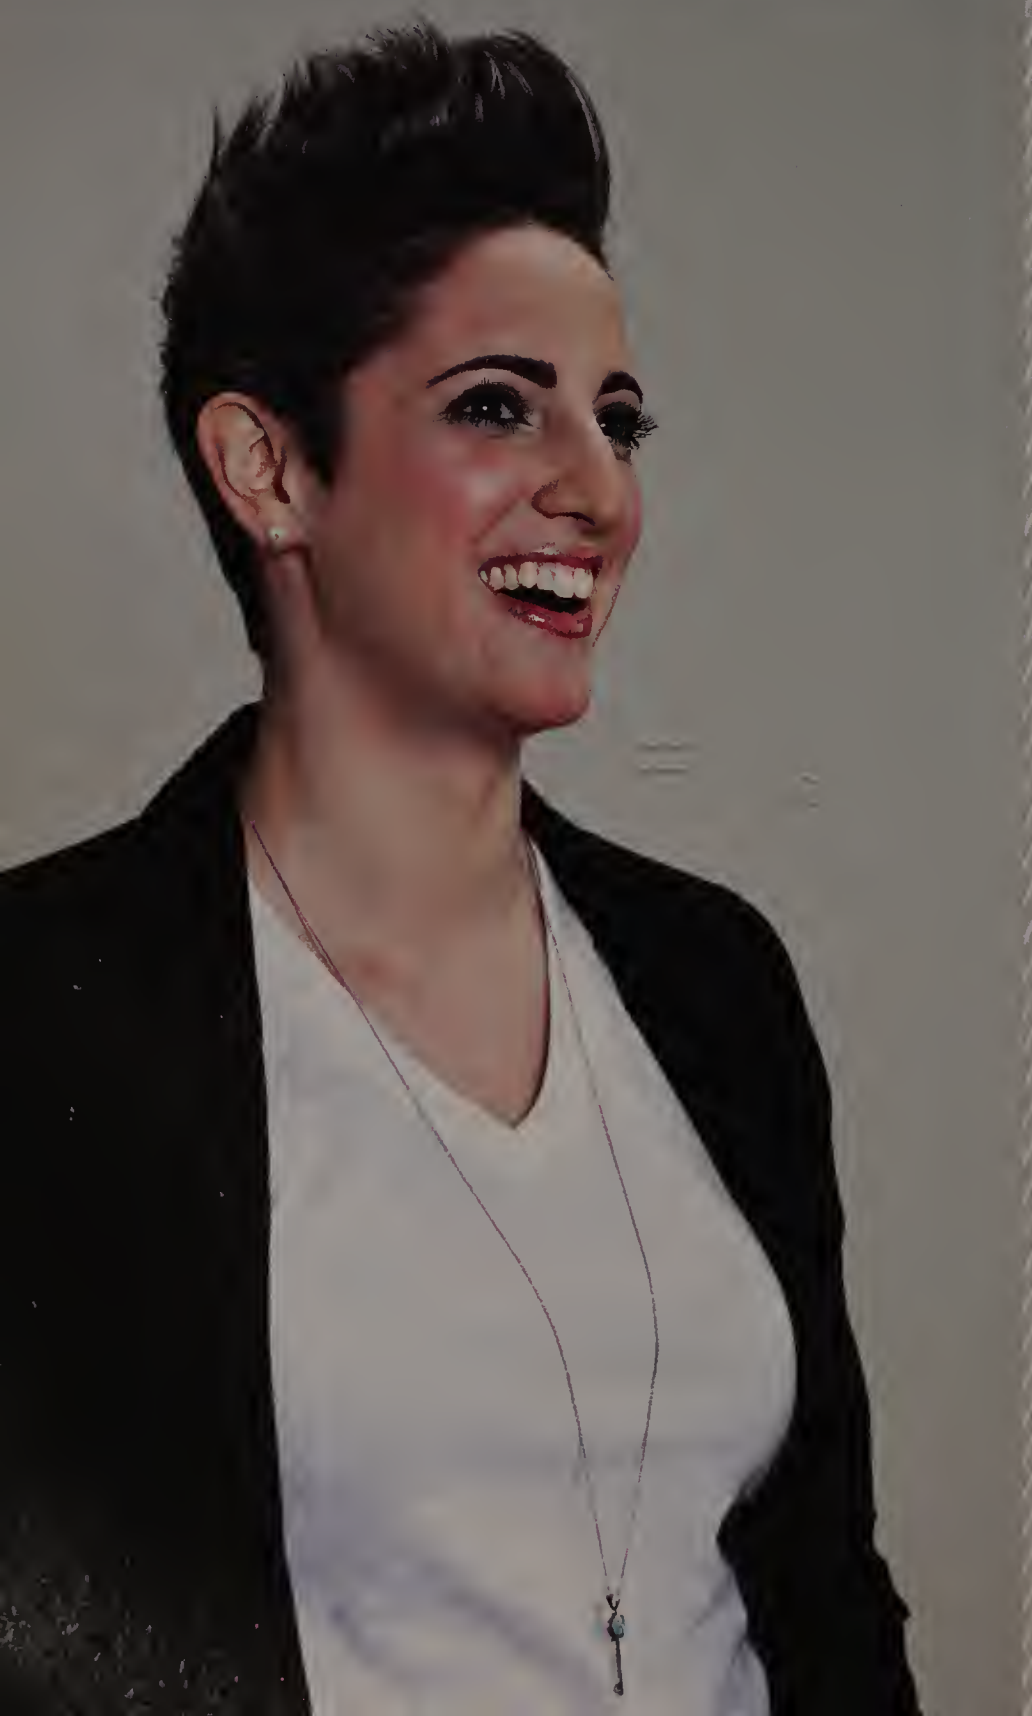
Eric Papachristos

CO-OWNER OF TRADE RESTAURANT, 34

One man for whom the adjective "dreamy" is apt, you may remember him from his (blessedly brief) 2008 stint on The Bachelorette. Born in Boston but raised in Thessaloniki, this Greek god came back to the States as a teen and is now a co-owner (with Sean Griffing and chef Jody Adams) of the blindingly hot restaurant Trade. Completely self-made, as a teen, he and his brother convinced their father to let them open a deli in his variety store. Within no time, they were making bank, and it's been moving upwards ever since. He served as the food and beverage manager at Los Angeles' swanky Standard Hotel, and then moved back to Boston where he worked in finance in Harvard's I.T. department while earning a master's at Northeastern. Add a stint as an executive at Ropes & Gray and owning a pair of successful family restaurants, and central casting couldn't do any better for a leading man. To stay in fighting trim, he's a certified CrossFit trainer, while this past summer he rode 192 miles (with Griffing and Adams) in the Pan-Mass Challenge. Aside from the villa in Como, Clooney's got nothing on him.

Jesse Mermell SELECTMAN, TOWN OF BROOKLINE; STATE DIRECTOR, MASSACHUSETTS ASSOCIATION FOR THE BLIND AND VISUALLY IMPAIRED, 31

Determined to make the world a better place, this Pennsylvania native is the youngest person ever elected to the Brookline Board of Selectmen and serves as the state director of the Massachusetts Association for the Blind and Visually Impaired (MAB). She's fiercely loyal, occasionally sarcastic and her ideal date is "anything that isn't too stuffy and involves lots of laughing. Bonus points if it includes Fenway Park and/or Dairy Queen." A bumper sticker in her office says: "Ich ben niet koppig. Ich ben Nederlands," or, "I'm not stubborn. I'm Dutch." Given her grit, it's not surprising that she finished the Boston Marathon. Equally unsurprising: She did it to raise money for Brookline Community Mental Health. Guys without good manners don't stand a chance, and she considers the Public Garden one of the city's most romantic spots. Which means she has excellent taste.



Kurt Cole Eidsvig ARTIST, WRITER AND CONSULTANT, 37

Few people are successful artists. Even fewer are successful artists and high-powered consultants. A painter whose work is regularly exhibited in galleries and juried shows, a writer and critic for numerous publications, and a poet whose words have been published in more anthologies and collections than you've ever read, his success in corporate America allowed him to start his own consulting firm five years ago. Heavily involved in the Fort Point Arts Community, he also serves on the board of Round Table Servants, a nonprofit supporting arts and athletics for inner-city teens. Perhaps we shouldn't be surprised by the 400-page novel he has tucked away or his affinity for Hemingway, especially given that he earned an MFA in creative writing from the University of Montana. His wanderlust led him to drive cross-country at least six times, and he loves to travel abroad. A dichotomy wrapped up in a conundrum, he can listen to the Wu-Tang Clan at top volume or contemplate a Monet for hours.

Dana Searle

FOOD AND BEVERAGE MANAGER, WOODWARD AT AMES, 23

A rising star in the local culinary scene, this Connecticut native became the food and beverage manager at Woodward almost immediately after finishing her degree in hospitality at B.U.—but not before she'd worked at a private downtown club, a Newbury Street restaurant, a suburban country club and Walt Disney World. Her killer sense of humor, infectious laugh, great hair and self-assurance make her incandescent. She rides a motorcycle and has the kind of karma that results in things like a first date where she and a girl found a bench overlooking the water and a fireworks display just happened to explode before their eyes. Perhaps most telling: Despite the fact that she's a lesbian, two of the guys she met at the mixer have come in to the hotel to pay a visit.

Alison Vacovec

DIRECTOR OF SALES, MOBILEFUSE, 33

In eighth grade, she was voted "best eyes," and we still think she's a stunner. After growing up in Winchester, she earned her BA from Colgate and moved to New York, where she launched her career in the music business. At MTV, she worked on the VMAs. At Columbia Records, she worked with artists like John Mayer, Jessica Simpson and Beyoncé, and, eventually, she landed a job working for Sting. A move back to Boston and a transition to high tech followed, until she joined MobileFuse—a mobile advertising firm—as director of sales. Vivacious and outgoing, she's a fantastic water-skier, a fanatical sports nut, a borderline gym rat (hoping to be an instructor soon) and isn't afraid to stay out late. At the Forum party, she already knew several of the other singles, and she wasted no time in getting to know the others. Fiercely loyal and family-oriented, she spends most of the summer with her cousins in Webster, on Lake Chargoggagoggmanchauggagoggchaubunagungamaugg. Anyone who wants to be her partner in crime will have to wrap his tongue around that one.

Victoria Bratberg DIRECTOR OF FINE JEWELRY, SKINNER, 36

Hailing from Illinois, she went to Southern Methodist University in Dallas before moving to New York and joining Sotheby's auction house, where she earned her gemology degree. Last year, she moved here to become the head of the jewelry department at Skinner, and she fits seamlessly into Boston's aura of cultured elegance. She owns two dogs, Bofin and Lafite, and carries herself like Audrey Hepburn. Witty and self-deprecating, she says her ideal date is "someone who doesn't cancel," and she's a whiz at things other women fuss over, like whipping up a soufflé. Besides brains and beauty, she comes with a house in Cabo San Lucas and a demeanor that's both calmly ethereal and game for a bit of mischief. Not surprising for someone who appraises jewelry for a living, she can spot a fake from a mile away, and her taste is superb. Forgive the glaringly obvious pun, but she's simply a gem.

Joselin Mane COFOUNDER AND CEO, BOSTONTWEETUP

The youngest and only son in a Dominican family of five, he was raised by a single mother in Lawrence, meaning he knows how to relate to a busy woman. After a full scholarship to Holderness School, he studied engineering at Northeastern and climbed the corporate ladder until IBM featured him in a full-page ad praising his work helping the furniture giant Herman Miller save a million dollars a year through e-learning. From there, he went on to start LITBeL Consulting in 1999, but his latest endeavor is BostonTweetUp, an event planning and promotions company that leverages social media in community building. He jokes that he's the only Dominican "to sell out a major corporate venue in Boston without playing baseball." A master at networking, he's full of charm and intelligence, along with boundless enthusiasm and energy. The night of our mixer, he met someone with whom he's since dated. Success has allowed him to build his family a house in the Dominican Republic, and while he could easily adopt attitude, he's a casual guy who's easy to get along with and just as easy on the eyes.

Melinda Sarkis

HAMMOND RESIDENTIAL, 40

One of the city's top-producing residential real estate brokers, this beautiful brunette was born and raised in New Hampshire and attended the Walnut Hill School for the Arts. In addition to selling homes, she teaches Core Fusion at Exhale and runs the Boston Marathon as a member of Tedy's Team, to raise money and awareness for stroke prevention. Self-effacing and quick to laugh, she has a megawatt smile and a nuclear reactor's level of energy. A beach-lover and adventurer, she once climbed to the top of the Golden Gate Bridge. As comfortable at a dive bar as she is in a five-star restaurant, she's poised, polished and prettier than anyone has a right to be. Any guy lucky enough to date her will have to work hard to keep up.

Stephen Lampert

ENTREPRENEUR, MBA STUDENT, 30

A Duxbury native, he attended Bowdoin and is earning an MBA from Babson College. A devoted skier, surfer and all-around athlete, he's an adrenaline junkie who's up for anything with a daredevil element. He's charismatic and self-assured without being cocky, but admits to sometimes being impulsive to a fault. Recently, he started an outdoor bag company on Martha's Vineyard that's geared toward island-hoppers who aren't named Biff or wear whale pants. A keen sense of humor and the kind of good looks that turn the ladies' heads, he gets bonus points for a head of hair so thick he claims hikers have gotten lost in it. His ideal mate? "I'm a sucker for what I call 'Connecticut hot,' which is very different than 'L.A. hot' or 'Miami hot.'" In other words, he's looking for the girl next door.

Kathleen McGhee

EVENT DIRECTOR, UPSTAIRS ON THE SQUARE, 35

The consummate hostess, she's a perfectionist without being annoying about it, knowing that the key to hospitality is to make her guests feel welcome, whether or not they even remembered to RSVP. As events director at UpStairs on the Square, she works with some of the city's top chefs and the world's finest winemakers, and her aesthetic sensibilities are more than up to the task. Raised in New Hampshire, she did a brief stint in fashion in New York before moving to San Francisco where she was the marketing manager for Yoga Journal, producing large-scale events with celebrities nationwide. After missing three New England autumns, she returned to Boston, and we're much richer for it. She's adaptable to any situation—a roll-with-the-punches type—and any woman interested in dating her had better be, too. With dimples and eyes that could charm the birds from the trees, she's a sparkler. Extra points for being super low-maintenance and drama-free.

Jamie Doris

DIRECTOR OF INTERACTIVE SERVICES, STEVENS ADVERTISING ASSOCIATES, 38

After studying French at the University of New Hampshire and working in Geneva and Paris, this independent thinker is now with a boutique advertising agency that handles art and entertainment clients in Boston, Philadelphia, Washington and Miami. As easygoing as he is wildly creative, he admires his parents' 41-year marriage, and wouldn't mind emulating it with the right guy. At parties he wears an omnipresent smile, and he was a part of the team that founded the Edge Gay Media Network. One of his closest friends describes him as "cultured, genuine, honest and kind." The top of Cadillac Mountain in Acadia is his idea of a romantic spot, and the guy who gets this Boy Scout up there will have won the ultimate merit badge.

Misa Kuranaga

PRINCIPAL DANCER, BOSTON BALLET

As the song from A Chorus Line goes, "Everything was beautiful at the ballet," which is certainly true when this dancer takes the stage. Born and raised in Osaka, Japan, she won gold medals at the Moscow International and USA International ballet competitions and performed as a guest artist with the New York City Ballet. Last September, she produced A Thousand Cranes, a successful fund-raiser for tsunami relief. That such tremendous strength and grace could be contained in such a petite package is astonishing—and don't get us started on her stage presence. Despite her stature, underestimate her at your peril. She's as indomitable as they come but laughs often and easily, and has a character that keeps people on their A-game.

Jon Albanese

EXECUTIVE SPORTS PRODUCER, WEEI BOSTON RED SOX & BOSTON CELTICS RADIO, 31

While studying radio broadcasting in college, he worked as an intern at WRKO and wound up as executive sports producer at WEEI—the dream job of any sports fan, especially one from Melrose. With a voice like Gaston in Beauty and the Beast (but without the arrogance), he likes a good adventure, saying an ideal date could include, "lunch, followed by skydiving, street luge or bungee-jumping." His closest girlfriend describes him as "a good listener, diligent and loyal," and he gets bonus points for loving to cook for his lady and thinking nothing is more romantic than "comfortable silence with your significant other." Having survived cancer as a teenager, he has his priorities straight. He's the type of guy who once showed up for a first date at a girl's apartment to find it strewn with boxes, and, when she asked him to help her move instead of hit the town, he gallantly gave her a hand.

Julia Harte Owens

PROGRAM OFFICER, RIDGEWAY PHILANTHROPY, 31

A cross between Katharine Hepburn in Bringing Up Baby and Winona Ryder in Heathers, she was born and raised on Beacon Hill, attended Phillips Academy Andover, Emerson and the London Academy of Music and Dramatic Art. She now works as a philanthropic adviser in Boston and is actively involved in many nonprofits—among them the board of the Planned Parenthood League of Massachusetts, the alumni board of Emerson, the Emerald Necklace Conservancy and Helping Hands: Monkey Helpers for the Disabied. The peaches-and-cream beauty of a Fragonard painting hides a stand-up comic's repartee. She's seen a good deal of the world but maintains a doe-eyed capacity for amazement. And don't mistake the quirky outlook for a laissez-faire attitude; she's as devoted and caring as they come.

THE NEW ROMANTICISM

Real passion shirks the Hallmark trappings of Valentine's Day. But as holidays go, it's still the best excuse to wear grand-gesture jewelry and killer lingerie.

How do we love such baubles and underthings? Let us count the ways.

Travis Chamberlain

INTIMATE DETAILS

PERFORMED IN A SUITE in Ames Hotel, director Travis Chamberlain's rendition of Tennessee Williams' Green Eyes captures the claustrophobia of marriage by seating audience members right at the foot of a couple's honeymoon bed. The unusual staging, with a mere 25 seats per show, takes viewers between the sheets with two troubled newlyweds as their sexual fantasies and quarrels hover between violence and passion. Although Williams wrote the play in 1970, the erotic thriller went unpublished for nearly 40 years. Now it bares all (admission is 18+) in this critically acclaimed performance that comes to Boston after a sold-out run in New York. See the (relatively) private display of affection through Feb. 12.

SHELBY CARIGNAN

Green Eyes runs through Feb. 12, $35, at Ames Hotel, 1 Court St., Boston (800-838-3006) brownpapertickets.com or companyone.org.

All in the Family

It's a Stretch When The Addams Family creeps into the Citi Performing Arts Center Shubert Theatre on Feb. 7, the bevy of creepy, kooky (and altogether ooky) characters will be trying something entirely new—singing. More closely based on The New Yorker comics than the classic TV show, this award-winning production reanimates the beloved, near-dead characters in a way audiences haven't seen. How mysterious. Shelby Carignan

Carnage ★★★★ Sublime. Roman Polanski's dyspeptic adaptation of Yasmina Reza's Tony Award–winning God of Carnage traps two aging yuppie couples in an upscale Brooklyn apartment, then watches all pretense of civilized behavior gradually disintegrate. Their kids have gotten into a scuffle at recess, so the school demands that these parents meet to talk out the punishment. Passive-aggressive sniping abounds, until finally the Scotch comes out and all bets are off. Jodie Foster embodies a brittle limousine liberal until finally falling to pieces at the provocations of her lummox husband, John C. Reilly. Kate Winslet boozes around in pearls as a prissy mom fed up with her career-obsessed partner (Inglourious Basterds' Christoph Waltz, who never stops talking on his cell phone). Polanski's offhandedly elegant compositions map the ebbs and flows of this battle royale, all within the confines of one living room. Side-splittingly funny, it's like Edward Albee and Luis Buñuel got stuck in an elevator together. Carnage feels like a microcosm of both everything that matters and nothing of any consequence whatsoever. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

The Descendants ★★★ Despite never quite buying him as a cuckold, I enjoyed George Clooney's rumpled everyman turn in Alexander Payne's latest feature, adapted from Kaui Hart Hemmings' 2007 novel. When his cheating wife is critically injured in a boating accident during the opening credits, Clooney needs to step up and take charge of his family for the first time. The Descendants' plotless middle hour is particularly fantastic. Shailene Woodley's coltish awkwardness plays to the hesitation present in Clooney's relationship with his teen daughters, and Payne has a knack for letting scenes breathe and allowing his characters to surprise us. The central action in this very funny and often quite sad movie is Clooney stepping back and reevaluating everything and everybody he once took for granted. It feels like a transitional film for Payne, who has lost his young-man pitilessness and here reaches for a more accepting tone. It grows on you. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

Extremely Loud and Incredibly Close ★ Gross is the only word I'd use to describe director Stephen Daldry's adaptation of Jonathan Safran Foer's widely lambasted 2005 best seller. He's a wretched filmmaker who receives Academy Award nominations on a semiannual basis for transforming well-regarded books like The Hours and The Reader into star-studded features that nobody would ever sit through a second time. Foer's literary conceit is that 9/11 turned us all into a nation of lost children, and so it goes that we must follow Oskar, a boy who lands somewhere on the Asperger's spectrum and lost his father on that miserable September morning. Suffering from a movie-cute aversion to public transportation and hyper-edited panic attacks, Oskar isn't a character so much as an assemblage of quirks, a precocious proto-hipster who'll presumably be writing for McSweeney's before his 13th birthday. It's not actor Thomas Horn's fault that this is one of the most obnoxious characters with whom I've ever been trapped in a dark room. He was obviously directed that way. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Flowers of War ★★ ½ Zhang Yimou's lavish, if occasionally tacky, spectacle dares to use the Rape of Nanking as the backdrop for melodrama, but the emotional impact is undeniable. Imagine Pearl Harbor made by somebody who knew what he was doing, and you're halfway there. In 1937, while drooling Japanese soldiers pillage and bayonet their way through the bombed-out rubble of the occupied city, a drunkard mortician (very well-played by Christian Bale) is stuck caring for a cathedral full of abandoned orphans, plus some hot prostitutes seeking refuge in this house of the Lord. There's an odd disconnect between The Flowers of War's shockingly violent interludes and the screenplay's cornpone embellishments. But these flourishes felt like a bit of relief from the near omnipresent rape and carnage. Zhang's unapologetically Old Hollywood storytelling has quite a bit in common with a certain Steven Spielberg epic in theaters now. He might as well have called it War Whores. (At Kendall Square.)

The Girl With the Dragon Tattoo ★★ Proving that if you put a silk hat on a pig, it's still a pig, super-producer Scott Rudin corralled a frightening amount of talent for a newfangled Xerox of Stieg Larsson's best-selling phenomenon, which was already dragged out into a trifecta of Swedish movies just a couple years ago. Better acting, better cinematography, but in the end it's still just a rapey episode of Cold Case. Daniel Craig stars as the disgraced journalist roped into solving a 40-year-old murder

WILD CARD

Liam Neeson has aged into a bona fide badass.

The Grey ★★★½
Starring Liam Neeson, Dermot Mulroney, Frank Grillo, James Badge Dale and Dallas Roberts. Written by Joe Carnahan and Ian Mackenzie Jeffers. Directed by Joe Carnahan. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

F. SCOTT FITZGERALD ONCE said, "There are no second acts in American lives." But that's not so in movies, and the reincarnation that's tickled me most is AARP-aged, Oscar-nominee Liam Neeson's ascension to B-movie badass.

After playing the grizzled mentor to less interesting stars like Leonardo DiCaprio and Orlando Bloom before politely excusing himself to go die at the end of the second reel, Neeson had a fluke smash with the shamelessly entertaining Taken.

Now the star of Schindler's List makes a habit of spending the snowy season beating the crap out of people in pictures that are exponentially more enjoyable thanks to his hearty presence, sly humor and grave commitment to even the thinnest of material. (Yes, I even liked Unknown.)

Arriving right on time for your midwinter fix is The Grey, director Joe Carnahan's survivalist nightmare set in the Alaskan wilderness. There are two surprises here. The first: Neeson isn't running around exotic locales knocking teeth out of Eurotrash baddies. This time he's fighting wolves. The second: This is a damn good movie.

Neeson stars as Ottway, a brokenhearted man working for a crooked oil company, surrounded by roughnecks in the middle of nowhere. He keeps to himself, writing florid letters to a long-lost beloved that he never dares send.

But when their plane crashes en route to Anchorage, Ottway finds himself leading a motley band of survivors on a trek through nasty terrain. None of these men are suffering from the illusion that their employer cares enough to come looking for them, and the dwindling supplies and monstrous weather should be more than enough to do our boys in, provided they can keep from killing each other first.

Oh, and then there are all the wolves.

Luckily, Neeson once again plays a character with "a particular set of skills." Ottway knows his way around the wilderness, and knows all too well about these fanged beasts he's been charged with killing every time they set foot on oil company property. Suddenly finding himself prey, Ottway's suicidal tendencies give way to a pure survivalist muscle-memory. If he's gonna go out, it's gonna be on his own terms, godammnit.

He's so comfortable in his own skin that admitting to frailty looks like the bravest thing you could do during a He-Man measuring contest.

The Grey is a refreshingly no-frills tale of Man vs. the Elements, the kind of rousing outdoor adventure we haven't seen since Anthony Hopkins, Alec Baldwin and David Mamet's screenplay were stranded nearby in 1997's The Edge.

And like The Edge, I imagine this is a picture that will grow on me even more with repeat viewings. I honestly had no idea director Joe Carnahan had something like this in him.

Famous for helming mouthy crime knock-offs, Carnahan's been responsible for Narc, Smokin' Aces and was most recently sighted attempting to turn The A-Team into a big-screen franchise.

The Grey is the first Carnahan movie that could credibly be called restrained, recalling pictures like Deliverance by letting the visuals do the talking, instead of trying to assert his own annoying cleverness. This is a huge leap forward for a filmmaker I had written off many movies ago.

Of course it'd all be unthinkable without Neeson, here at the center of almost every frame, magnetic in his gravitas and grace.

Perhaps my favorite moment of Neeson's career arrives when one of the oppositional tough-guys (played strikingly well by Frank Grillo) lets loose with a torrent of profanity before announcing, "I ain't scared!"

"I'm terrified," Ottway smiles, warmly. "No shame in that."

It's classic Neeson, with that winking Irish fatalism and incongruously soft voice. He's so comfortable in his own skin that admitting to frailty looks like the bravest thing you could do during a He-Man measuring contest.

Then, later, he curses out God and fistfights a wolf. This movie is awesome. ✖✖✖ on a remote island. Rooney Mara mesmerizes as the iconic Lisbeth Salander, a feral, wounded abuse victim with Goth superhero powers, once again trapped within a story sadly content to abandon her on the sidelines. Director David Fincher attempts to infuse this airport novel with the gravitas of his triumphant Zodiac by dwelling on the minutiae of the investigative process at comically absurd length. Save for Mara's searing performance, there's nothing new here. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Hugo ★★★★ Leave it to Martin Scorsese to direct a children's adventure about the importance of film preservation. Working from Brian Selznick's book, The Invention of Hugo Cabret, this miracle of a movie follows the title orphan (Asa Butterfield) as he hides out in a Parisian train station in the 1930s, winding the clocks and dodging a pratfall-riddled rent-a-cop (Sacha Baron Cohen). Meanwhile, a grumpy shopkeeper (Ben Kingsley) just might have a secret of his own. Hugo takes a sharp turn into a voluptuously helmed cinema history lesson that should be taught in schools. Scorsese employs cutting-edge digital 3-D technologies for this love letter to forgotten films, embracing the exploratory spirit of the medium's original pioneers. Hugo reminded me why I fell in love with movies in the first place. (At Boston Common, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Joyful Noise ★ ½ Like something out of a circus sideshow, the disfigured remains of Dolly Parton's face appear onscreen for the first time in 20 years, and I'd be lying if I said I wasn't fascinated watching all these ill-fitting spare parts attempt to emote. Alas, the occasion is a market-tested product clumsily engineered for church groups with little interest in preaching to anybody outside the choir. Parton plays second banana to Queen Latifah. Each is vying for leadership of a Georgia chorus headed for a national competition while trying to stave off the influence of these rascally kids with their dang hip-hop music. There's a breathtakingly awful performance by Jeremy Jordan as Parton's rebellious grandson, and the movie awkwardly lurches from one easily resolved non-conflict to another. The musical numbers suffer from terrible lip-synching so obviously fussed over in a recording studio that all the joy is sapped from this noise. But I did like the scene where Kris Kristofferson comes back from the dead to sing a duet with Dolly. (At Boston Common, Fresh Pond and in the suburbs.)

Man on a Ledge ★★ As befitting the dullness of the title, director Asger Leth's first feature manages to remain curiously watchable while never becoming interesting. Riotously miscast, the film stars Sam Worthington, such a blank slate of bland ruggedness that it once again took me half a movie to remember where I'd seen him before. He plays an honest cop framed for the theft of something called the Monarch Diamond—a $40 million gem belonging to Ed Harris' Trump-y blowhard. After escaping from prison, Worthington acts as advertised, stepping out on the ledge of Harris' five-star hotel, stirring up a media circus and proclaiming his innocence. Elizabeth Banks turns up as a boozy, cynical cop. (What did I tell you about the casting?) Silly me, I still wanted to see what became of the Monarch Diamond. Probably because I was hungover. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Mission: Impossible—Ghost Protocol ★★★ This franchise has always been a director's demo reel in which diverse talents take turns showing off all the different ways they can film their star/producer sprinting. It's a delivery system for action set-pieces, but Brad Bird's fourth installment has some doozies, including the greatest stunt sequence I've seen in years. The brilliant animator behind The Incredibles makes his live-action debut with an astonishing facility for conveying information in bold visual flourishes. What makes Ghost Protocol special is Bird's knack for spinning our bickering crew from one absurdly dangerous situation to another with a spatial cause and effect logic worthy of Looney Tunes. A portion of the film was shot in IMAX, and for once, it's worth the extra bucks just to see how Bird and cinematographer Robert Elswit work this film's instantly classic skyscraper centerpiece, which I watched through splayed fingers and can't wait to see again. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

My Week With Marilyn ★★ Simon Curtis' adaptation of Colin Clark's suspect memoir is a great big slab of fan-fiction—a film that follows the template of 2008's Me and Orson Welles as a banal wish-fulfillment fantasy for movie buffs. Charmless Eddie Redmayne plays Clark, an idealist with silver-screen dreams, working a thankless job on Sir Laurence Olivier's The Prince and the Showgirl. Olivier, played with what looks like a prosthetic chin by Kenneth Branagh, cast American bombshell Marilyn Monroe as his costar, assuming he'd get to sleep with her. Michelle Williams, an actress apparently incapable of giving a bad performance, is the picture's lone saving grace. The Monroe va-va-voom is very clearly just another one of Norma Jean's costume changes, and the real pleasure of Williams' work is watching her flip her sex-kitten routine on and off like a light switch. One can't help wondering what a serious movie about Marilyn Monroe might've been like with the fearless Williams in the role, but this is little more than the masturbatory fancies of Redmayne's nonentity. (In the suburbs.)

Pariah ★★ ½ Earnest, deeply felt and only slightly thin, director Dee Rees' feature debut stars the radiant Adepero Oduye as Alike, a teen poet trying to embrace her homosexuality in an awfully unfriendly New York City. Unfortunately, this obviously semiautobiographical tale hews a bit too close to the indie-movie-cliché-playbook for comfort. Did our protagonist really have to write poetry? But there's a surprisingly strong performance by Kim Wayans, of all people, as an angry, churchgoing mother, plus some stellar work from Charles Parnell as a devoted father with a few flaws of his own. Credit Rees for the density of the atmosphere, bluntly exploring an African-American subculture seldom captured on film. What the movie could've used is a subplot or two. Expanded from a Sundance-feted short film, Pariah feels awfully long at 80-odd minutes. The narrowness

Shine On

What's Inn Store If you're a fan of macabre films filled with creaky floors and looming shadows, check in to The Innkeepers. Ti West's Ghostbusters-meets-The Shining flick follows two desk clerks at a New England hotel who decide to test the local lore and conjure spirits. The film lands at the Coolidge Corner Theatre Feb. 3–4 before making its national debut later this month. Ariel Spierer of its focus eventually becomes asphyxiating. (At Kendall Square.)

Shame ★★★★ Director Steve McQueen (no, not that one) follows up Hunger, his despairing Bobby Sands biopic, with an unsettling depiction of sex addiction in Manhattan. Michael Fassbender delivers the year's most fearless performance as Brandon, a successful yuppie who buries himself in an oblivion of empty hookups, seedy clubs, prostitutes and porn. When Brandon's train-wreck of a sister (Carey Mulligan) arrives needing a place to crash, their frayed family dynamic ruptures Brandon's self-imposed isolation. Short on dialogue and shot in minutes-long takes that leave the performers nowhere to hide, Shame is an exposed nerve. McQueen's vision of New York City is steely and unforgiving, all reflective surfaces and anonymity. Mulligan, too often confined to playing a kitten, is a revelation here, aching with carnal need. Look past all the sex and this is a horror movie about the loneliness and alienation imposed by modern life. (At Kendall Square and the Waltham Embassy.)

Sherlock Holmes: A Game of Shadows ★ ½ I worry that Robert Downey Jr. is turning into Johnny Depp. Guy Ritchie's 2009's Sherlock Holmes will never be mistaken for a great movie, but it was clever, light on its feet and at least offered the winning spectacle of Downey and Jude Law bickering like a couple of old queens. The dude-ish, bare-knuckle-brawling Holmes upset most dedicated followers of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's original stories, but I could roll with the reinterpretation. Not so with this sorry sequel, which lands in theaters like a lump of Christmas coal. It's bigger and louder, and so much less involving. Holmes can't even be bothered to solve much in this non-mystery, as he and Watson spend most of their time running from explosions that drown out their bitchy banter. Eventually Jared Harris turns up as a sorely outmatched Professor Moriarty. Yawn. There's a deadness to Downey's delivery, hitting overfamiliar beats as if he's walking through a theme park instead of a movie. He might as well be playing Captain Jack Sparrow. (At Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Tinker Tailor Soldier Spy ★★ Let the Right One In director Tomas Alfredson's stagnant adaptation of John le Carré's spy novel revels in the source material's status as the anti-Bond thriller. Set in a 1973 rife with bad sideburns and unflattering eyeglasses, it's espionage full of ugly men toting manila folders and making insinuations in rooms so smoky that even the movie theater winds up with nicotine stains on its walls. Something very bad happened in Budapest, and Gary Oldman's George Smiley is eventually coaxed from retirement to ferret out a mole within the British secret service. Chockablock with great English character actors aching for a paycheck now that the Harry Potter series is over, Tinker Tailor fusses with a fractured time line, obscuring crucial information and priding itself on keeping the audience as far away from the plot as possible. This is an expertly mounted, enervating slog. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

War Horse ★★★ The schmaltziest movie of the year, War Horse is just Steven Spielberg doing what Steven Spielberg does. Even if that ain't your thing, there's still no denying that he's the most gifted craftsman of his generation. Based on Michael Morpurgo's 1982 children's book—recently adapted into a smash Broadway play by Nick Stafford—it arrives etched in the simple, bold strokes of a passed-down fable. Newcomer Jeremy Irvine (a lantern-jawed hunk who looks like Christopher Reeve perpetually on the verge of tears) trains the title mount, a magnificent creature we follow through a long procession of various owners and occasionally harrowing vignettes. Folks in impossibly ugly situations rise to the occasion by reaching out to one another with simple acts of kindness, more often than not inspired by this strangely magnetic horse. Of course, it's corny. This is a Disney movie directed by Steven Spielberg. Resistance is futile. (In the suburbs.)

Young Adult ★ Written by Diablo Cody, who won an Oscar for coming up with Juno's obnoxious catchphrases, Young Adult feels like it was made to settle some old scores. Charlize Theron stars as a drunken divorcée ghostwriting the final installment in a canceled series of insipid tween novels. Wildly misinterpreting an e-mailed birth announcement from her high school flame (Patrick Wilson), she heads back to her hometown to break up his marriage. On one hand, the film is a mean-spirited revenge fantasy, in which the girl who was more popular than you in high school arrives home 20 years later as a failed shrew. Director Jason Reitman wallows in agonizingly long scenes of her public humiliation, while Theron's fearlessly grating performance asks for no audience empathy whatsoever. On the other hand, we must suffer the movie's septic condescension toward small-town life. Cody and Reitman appear to be primarily interested in making cheap jokes at the expense of anybody who isn't lucky enough to be Diablo Cody or Jason Reitman. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

DR. FUNKENSTEIN

George Clinton schools a new generation in the ways of funk.

William Thoren

FUNK PIONEER GEORGE Clinton fondly recalls his years living in Boston. Here, at the dawn of the '70s, his outfit Funkadelic took flight at the Combat Zone club Sugar Shack.

"We used to be tripping our asses off," he says. "We took off our suits and everything and went totally 'funkadelic,' which meant we were naked onstage. The Sugar Shack, we used to transform it. They called it 'Pimps, hos and hippies.'"

By the mid-'70s, Clinton's myth-baked carnival rolled into arenas with a spacecraft prop dubbed "the Mothership" and lavishly costumed characters, from diaper-clad guitarist Garry Shider to Clinton as the futuristic Dr. Funkenstein.

"The rock 'n' roll thing was happening–and that's what we got into," says Clinton, who, inspired by the music of Jimi Hendrix and Sly Stone, took their music to another level. "I was definitely into sci-fi, and I watched Pink Floyd put on a big production. I knew we needed to be theatrical."

Today, at age 70, Clinton has scaled back the theatrics while keeping the funk alive with Parliament-Funkadelic, which plays at the Wilbur Theatre on Feb. 9. The next week, Dr. Funkenstein gets a new doctorate, an honorary music degree from Berklee. During a four-day residency, Clinton will visit classes and join the college's P-Funk Ensemble for a Feb. 16 concert at the Berklee Performance Center.

"I'll just enjoy myself watching them do what they've done," he says from his Florida studio. "I might join in on something good." The school's P-Funk Ensemble plans to cover tunes that span Clinton's career, including favorites like "Flash Light," "Give Up the Funk (Tear the Roof Off the Sucker)" and "One Nation Under a Groove."

Clinton received his musical education in a New Jersey barbershop where he straightened hair and launched the doo-wop group the Parliaments in 1955. "We could rehearse, and you met other entertainers who came through," he says, citing the Temptations as an example. "Just about everybody who came to the Apollo [Theater] came to the barbershop."

Clinton worked as a staff songwriter for Motown during the '60s. But he kept the Parliaments afloat, scoring the 1967 R&B hit "(I Wanna) Testify" for a small record company. When the company folded, the rights to the band's name were left in limbo.

> "We used to be tripping our asses off."

So Clinton changed the group's name (a practice that became his habit), using the same backing musicians and singers as the Parliaments under the handle Funkadelic. Major players such as guitarist Eddie Hazel, keyboardist Bernie Worrell and bassist Bootsy Collins (from James Brown's band) came in and out of the fold. When Clinton regained control of the original name, he shortened it to Parliament and began to combine that moniker with Funkadelic.

His legal issues didn't stop with band names, however. Clinton says he lost royalties for records he made after 1975, and he's pressing Congress for artist copyright protections.

Yet Clinton says he's friends with those who have sampled his songs—from De La Soul to Snoop Dogg—making his catalog one of music's most borrowed. "That's part of the roots that keep it alive," he says, deriding record companies and publishers who collect sample fees without regard for the artists at either end. "They take the money from the rappers… they overcharge them," he says. "But they don't give the money to us."

At least Clinton still plays sizable venues with his P-Funk crew, drawing fans of hip-hop and techno as well as funk, R&B and rock. "It's loud and danceable," he says, "so we get all kinds of crowds."

It's a crowd onstage as well. Parliament-Funkadelic still boasts more than two dozen members, from longtime lead guitarist Mike Hampton and horn players Greg Thomas and Bennie Cowan to Clinton's rapping granddaughter, Shonda.

And the sprawling band still jams for three to four hours each night. "It takes that long to get all that stuff in," says the ringmaster, who doesn't subscribe to the theory of "leave them wanting more." "Hell no, the first two hours are for the people, and the last hour and a half is for us." ✖✖✖

The Cosmic Age

Coming in for a Landing Red-hot Mette Lindberg, lead vocalist of the the Danish band Asteroids Galaxy Tour, gets fans bopping to her band's psychedelic beats. Euro-pop comes to life behind the jazzy trumpet and sax accents from a six-piece horn section. Having shot to stardom in 2007 after opening for Amy Winehouse, the group's contributed music to episodes of Gossip Girl and Chuck and to a Heineken commercial. Asteroids Galaxy Tour is currently flying through spaces to promote its second album, Out of Frequency. Tune in Feb. 3 at the Middle East.

Food for Thought

Let Them Throw Cake If the day after Valentine's has you feeling a little hostile, why not pelt a few strangers in the face with a handful of noodles? The Cyclorama plays host to Boston-based artist Caitlin Berrigan's large-scale, figurative food fight that comments on class inequality. Interact with her humorous-yet-disquieting work "Spectrum of Inevitable Violence" at DeCordova Sculpture Park and Museum's 2012 DeCordova Biennial through April 22. There will be no need to mind your manners.

American Beauties

Camelot Calling

The life of John F. Kennedy Jr. was fodder for public consumption, but few had the intimate access of RoseMarie Terenzio. As his publicist, personal assistant and friend, she had a close-up view of his life under the lens—from marrying Carolyn Bessette, to launching George, to the effects of his sudden death in 1999. In Fairy Tale Interrupted, she holds little back, from the glitz to the tragic ending. Terenzio shares her insights at the Brookline Booksmith on Feb. 1.

FAMILY MATTERS

Bluebloods 'R' Us

The Winter Ball, which used to mark the presentation of Boston's debutantes, still endures, although in a somewhat altered form. Instead of a receiving line of girls in white gowns making their debut in society, guests are treated to part prep-school reunion, part sorority mixer, with a smattering of Brahmins and people who simply like to dance. In short: an elegant, inter-generational evening.

Another sign of the changing times: This year, instead of the Park Plaza, it was held in the rococo ballroom of the Fairmont Copley Plaza, which lent it a distinctly F. Scott Fitzgerald flavor, as it was so easy to sneak off to the Oak Bar for a martini.

Among the attendees were super-suave architect Juan Guillermo Uribe Rubio and his brunette intended, Maggie Feazell, I.T. impresario William Grote, the empress of Back Bay Smoki Bacon and her royal consort, Dick Concannon, Louisberg Square swells Hillary and Chris Gabrielli, the adorable Chynna Pope, über-outdoorsman Carl Deane, stunning redhead Laurie Consoli, my sister from another mother, Lucy Read Coolidge, Polish aristocrat Krystian von Speidel with his high-powered other half, Nathan Frank, Beacon Hellion Kimberlea Tracey, statuesque art dealer Charlotte Riggs, and one pedigreed young woman who helped investigate an interesting sociological query: How many of the other guests, we wondered, was she related to?

"Well, there's a Lowell, and that one's a Gardner, while that guy over there is a Gardiner with an 'i.' We call them 'the one-eyed Gardiners' and the 'blind Gardners.' I think that girl's a Saltonstall, etc., etc...."

We eventually lost count at "a lot" (and sneaking off to the Oak Bar for martinis didn't help matters), but it's safe to say that the Old Guard can still represent, and overall, it was a gilded evening.

The most amusing remark: "Among the blind, he could be considered a tennis pro."

Chynna Pope, Patrick Calhoun Hickox and Kristin Burns at the Winter Ball

Alexie Kozol, Chapin Duke, Olivia Beckwith and Anna Sagar at the Winter Ball

Gail and Bill Fine at the Boston Wine Festival opening

En Vino Veritas

Some people keep their New Year's resolutions for days. Weeks even. And then there are those who go to the Grand Opening of the Boston Wine Festival at the Boston Harbor Hotel.

Chef Daniel Bruce got the 23rd annual celebration off to an excellent start with a Champagne reception at Meritage, where the Taittinger flowed like it's supposed to and trays of indescribably scrumptious little things circulated like clockwork.

The Taittinger flowed like it's supposed to and trays of indescribably scrumptious little things circulated like clockwork.

On hand to partake was an intimate and excellent crowd that included Louboutin-rocking radio blabbermouth Lauren Beckham Falcone and her other half, David, TV grande dame Mary Richardson and her teddy bear of a husband, Stan Leven, soignée opinion maker Shelly Cohen, rock 'n' roll scribe Jim Sullivan and the ballerina-like Roza Yarchun.

Once everyone was well-lubricated, it was time to head downstairs to the Wharf Room for the official kickoff of the three-month festival and, not coincidentally, more wine and food. That's where we bumped into the likes of broadcasting behemoth Bill Fine and his fabulous wife, Gail, brunette bombshell Kim Richard, salty dog Ryan Stranz, and a guy who was a dead-ringer for Finnish trumpet virtuoso Håkan Hardenberger.

The funniest comment of the evening, however, was from a nice Irish girl who said, "After years of dating Irish guys, I finally got it right and married an Italian." ×××

The IMPROPER

Tomorrow and Tomorrow

It's true that necessity breeds invention. Lacking female company in high school, a friend of mine developed an ingenious trick in which he shoved the tip of a lubricated condom up his nostril, snorted deeply, unfurled it through his mouth and then yanked it back and forth through his nasal canal in a flossing motion, to the accompaniment of a lot of gagging and release of fluids. It was a magnificent conversation piece, although it didn't have the desired effect of picking up girls. In fact, he may have given himself a pharynx infection. But it's that sort of can-do, frontier spirit that made America great.

Adam DeTour

It's to such inspired souls that we dedicate our Innovators issue. But rather than dwell on the flights of genius that have rendered our lives so rich with online shopping opportunities, I want to complain about what technology has thus far failed to deliver. To wit: Why has no one invented a pig that, instead of blood, has a circulatory system based on mustard? Or an app that organizes all your other apps into the categories: "Pointless Time-Sucks," "Cat Pictures," and "Stuff I Could Figure Out Myself If My Brain Wasn't Consumed by Angry Birds"? Or a Katy Perry song that doesn't make me want to smash the speakers with a shoe? Or new, whimsical cupcake flavors? We need more of those.

That said, we now live in a world in which screw-cap wine bottles are commonplace. Things are looking up.

THE NEW MUSEUM OF MEDICAL HISTORY AND Innovation traces Mass. General Hospital's 200 years and the evolution of healing science From the days when anesthesia was a bottle of whiskey and a stick to clamp between your teeth to the manufacture of organs for transplant, the museum introduces characters like the former janitor who advanced X-ray technology by testing on himself, or the robot "patients" used for battlefield simulations. After 20 years of planning and more than $10 million in donations, it opens this April to show us how local innovators have shaped and healed the world

Well Rounded

You might be lured in by the waffles and fries, but there's a whole new list of reasons to pop into Saus—not the least of which are the veggie croquettes. These golf-ball–sized fritters look like falafel, but the potato-cauliflower-carrot mixture is fluffier, lighter and more delicately spiced than your typical chickpea mash. Order them stuffed into a whole-wheat pita with a bed of salad greens or fries, or on their own with a ramekin of samurai (read: spicy) mayo. ELIZABETH BOMZE

WHISK AND REWARD

Pop-ups, contests and a new downtown venture

BAKERY BY DAY, pop-up by night: Whisk Dessert Bar & Bistro in Jamaica Plain is quietly making a name for itself as a reservation-only venue where Philip Kruta says diners are "entertained and engaged with the food." A pastry chef who offers his own line of specialty cakes through Fiore's Bakery, Kruta has teamed up with two other chefs to present a seven-course tasting menu Thursday through Saturday at 7 and 9 pm. So far, diners have been overwhelmingly enthusiastic about the experience. Says Kruta, "We got standing ovations at the end of service."

YET ANOTHER BOSTON CHEF IS trying his hand at reality TV. Michael Bergin, sous chef at L'Espalier, debuts on Bud United Presents: The Big Time on Feb. 18 on ABC. He's one of three contestants vying for the chance to work as guest chef for a night at Hubert Keller's Fleur in Las Vegas. Meanwhile, sounds like Bergin's personal life could also make for a dramatic story line. Bergin's girlfriend is a manager at L'Espalier rival Menton, and the dynamic at home, he says, resembles the Montagues and Capulets. Action!

JUST IN TIME FOR (early) cookout season, Back Deck plans to fire up its trio of hardwood charcoal grills in the middle of May at West and Washington streets. Chef/general manager Paul Sussman (remember Daddy-O's?) partnered up with Brad Fredericks (Fajitas & 'Ritas) on the grill-and-chill eatery, which will offer brunch, lunch and dinner options ranging from small plates (grilled duck sausage with mashed potatoes and gumbo greens), to burgers, to entrees like Delmonico steak adobo.

First Taste

BLADES OF GLORY

Ritzy burgers continue to pop up on menus all over the city, but Ten Tables chef Sean Callahan's version, topped with bacon aioli and caramelized onion, has packed the Jamaica Plain spot since they started tackling bar bites in 2009. "We tried like 14 different recipes to get it perfect," recalls owner Krista Kranyak. "I think we nailed it." So it should come as no surprise that when she decided to diversify her brand 10 years and three Tables later, the new focus would be sandwiched between two buns. On the same block as her flagship restaurant, in the space that was once Bon Savor, Kranyak will launch Grass Fed in late February.

"I'M FOCUSED ON LONGEVITY."

Think of it as an L.L. Bean response to Ten Tables' Ralph Lauren luxury. The same quality endures, but Grass Fed is more rugged and casual. "I wanted to present this kind of food in a fast-food setting," she says. "There's a fad for it right now, but I'm focused on establishing legs and longevity." She's aiming to attract repeat eaters with a menu featuring endless combinations of locally sourced ground meats (ranging from grass-fed beef to organic turkey to fish) or veggie patties and house-made condiments. For gluten-free or low-carb diners, every option is available "in the grass," or served on a bed of organic greens. And if you dislike burgers (sacrilege!), paninis and po' boys showcase seafood or house-cured bacon. Callahan, who'll oversee the kitchen, is even trying his hand at a hot dog.

A wine, beer and cordials license is in the works, promising small-batch brews, organic wines and spiked milkshakes. Inside, there's a steel bar, gray oak floors and two counters: one for takeout and for dining-in on poutine and your patty of choice.

Noticeably absent from the menu is the beloved Ten Tables burger, but Kranyak seems convinced that fans will find something equally enticing on the menu here. And if they don't, that dish awaits a few doors down. KYLE WRIGHT

Q&A

TIED UP

Sudbury-raised comedian and Wait, Wait... Don't Tell Me! panelist Paula Poundstone performs at the Wilbur Theatre on Feb. 24.

Does returning to Boston feel like a homecoming?
Yes, I love coming back. When I started doing stand-up comedy, I went out to do an open-mike night. It must've been about two days before, and I took a shower and went to leave, and I had my underwear on the outside of my pants. And I realized that I was very, very nervous.

How is your second memoir coming?
Tragically slow. I wrote one book, and then I wrote three math workbooks with my high school teacher. And in all of those projects, I couldn't even send an e-mail. I handwrote everything. Everyone kept saying how much easier it would be if I used a computer, so I went and learned how to use a silly, stupid computer. I'll tell you, it has made it so hard. I know there are values to technology, but I think that everyone assumes that every bit of technology is a powerful move forward, and I'd really argue not.

What's the best part of working on* Wait, Wait... Don't Tell Me!?
For me, it's like being a batter in a batting cage. I just get lobbed topics, and because it's not scripted, some I can just watch go by, and some I get a little piece of. I find that very exciting.

Are you a crazy cat lady?
No, and I'll tell you why. I have two dogs. If you just have 16 cats, then people do think of you as a crazy cat lady. But if you have 16 cats and two German shepherds, you're an animal lover. And I hate them all the same. They're pissing me off so much lately. I'm totally sick of them. I take care of them. But there are days where I say to myself: Is this what I do for a living? The unseemly side of it, the waste, the cat throwup, it gets to be a bit much. I'll tell you where I made my mistake. We had a peaceful domicile until I got male cats. It was a really bad idea. I always thought they would spray, and then this lady from a bleeding-heart cat charity said, "Oh, not if you get them fixed young enough." Not true! It started the pee-o-rama in my house, and I spend my life chasing it, trying to keep everything sanitary. KYLE WRIGHT

VIRGINIA BILLY BARRY

Drink of the Moment

ALC(OHOL)HEMY

NAME: The Hadron Collider.

PRICE: $10.

WHIZBANG BAR BOSS: Rob Iurilli, formerly of B-Side Lounge, Chez Henri and Citizen Public House COMPONENTS: Murphy's Irish Stout, Jameson Irish Whiskey, sparkling wine.

THE X-FACTOR: Murphy's, still made in Ireland, is a lighter and sweeter alternative to Guinness with somewhat of a cult following. Abigail's is one of just a handful of Boston bars that keeps it on tap.

POSSIBLE PERMUTATIONS: There are at least 15 methods for combining the three options. Experiment away.

CAVEAT: Adding sparkling wine to a glass of Murphy's will produce a baking soda volcano-style eruption. Save it to top off a semi-full pint, which refoams the stout and amps up its creaminess.

IT'S A WHIMSICAL COMBINATION OF: A boilermaker and a Black Velvet. Also, Choose Your Own Adventure books.

PLEASE DON'T ORDER LIKE THIS: "I can haz Hadron Collider?"

CONVERSATION STARTERS FOR NON-SCIENTISTS: Black holes (space-time and/or emotional), Mentos–Diet Coke explosions, how to properly pronounce "Hadron."

Beauty

BEAUTY IN A BUBBLE

A NEW SPA ENCLAVE BLOSSOMS IN CHESTNUT HILL.

The charms of a stroll through Bloomingdale's have always been many: Fragrance freaks love the vortex of perfumed air; label stalkers adore the deep racks of Posen and Michael Kors; bauble collectors covet the epic strands of Temple St. Clair. Now add spa lovers to that list. They're coming in for Clarins—both the company's products counter and a freestanding day spa composed of soundproof cubes smack in the middle of the store.

The Chestnut Hill Mall spa is the first of its kind from Clarins in the U.S. It's already booking to capacity, thanks to professional-strength Clarins products (which aren't available at retail counters). And the treatments—many of which took decades of development before the techniques were just right—don't hurt, either. They include Triactive Facials that leave skin detoxed and glowing and Melting Honey massages that use heated slate and marble stones. Not to mention a honey-based gel that transforms into an oil when applied, then settles into the skin with the feel of a lotion.

The most notable part, though, isn't the sci-fi products or the bliss-inducing techniques. It's the switch that gets flipped after you've spent an hour in the pin-drop quiet treatment room and then step out into onto the brightly lit, bustling floor of the store. The first sensation nearly lulls you to sleep, the second jolts you awake. Together, they deliver a one-two punch of serious luxury.

TABLE MANOR

Growing up at UpStairs at the Pudding

IN THIS MEMOIR, THERE'S A near-mystical confluence of ethereal desserts, lacy party dresses and the emotional colorations of a childhood spent in Harvard Square's famous restaurant UpStairs at the Pudding. The author's powerful, stiletto-heeled mother cooked and air-kissed guests while her father, a former chef, drifted into the beatnik lifestyle, photographing shoes stuffed with dead ducks. Little Charlotte wistfully observed events, sometimes, rather symbolically, from under the table.

It was a world of sophisticated grownups and Hasty Pudding singers putting on exaggerated performances while decked out in bras and garters. The cooking staff was a motley crew of hardworking delinquents and immigrants, along with actor-types who, after hours, would intone scenes from Tennessee Williams amid the gold-smudged walls. Silver's descriptions draw from a diverse palette of colors and feelings. And, of course, there's the food. Hare flamed in Chartreuse, macaroon soufflé with apricot-brandy sauce, clementine ice—you could almost eat the book.

Charlotte Au Chocolat
by Charlotte Silver

Silver is from Cambridge.

Her father evolved into an offbeat pal, connecting her to the saltier local Cambridge life, while her glittering mother placed her childhood in a rich, maraschino-cherry-dotted landscape, but left the cupboard at home somewhat bare. Though more was gained, she concludes, than lost in this culinary upbringing. ×××

FROM PAGE 92: So when the waiters came up to my table, pen and paper in hand, I knew what to do. I raised my voice not loud but high. The voice wound up inside me, somewhere underneath my party dresses, and surged to the top, as when I twisted off the cap to a bottle of grenadine, it produced a squeak and then sweetness. Every thank you was like a shot of the syrup, straight, but the waiters didn't mind. They told my mother I was a lovely child. I had lovely manners.

ADVENTUROUS BLENDS

Most of the wines we buy are made with a predominant grape featured conspicuously on the label (chardonnay, cabernet). Marketing by the grape makes it easier for customers to remember what they like. But there are great wines that blend varietals into a delicious, harmonious whole. The following are amazing examples of rich, intense blended reds that are innovative expressions of their terroir.

✳ Masi "Campofiorin" Rosso del Veronese IGT Veneto, Italy, 2008 ($20, University Wine) Masi is a sixth-generation winemaker and the biggest Amarone producer. With a mix of 70 percent corvina, 25 percent rondinella and 5 percent molinara, this medium-bodied, earthy red has a raisiny quality, but it's vibrant and a bit smoky on the palate. A lovely selection with spicy stew or gumbo.

✳ Emiliana Coyam Colchagua Valley, Chile, 2009 ($30, Marsh's Liquor Store) Produced at South America's largest organic winery, this wine uses six grapes, including syrah, carménère and merlot. It's got a roasted coffee and blackberry flavor with strong tannins and a lingering, tobacco-like finish. Great with barbecued ribs.

✳ Vall Llach "Embruix" Priorat, Spain, 2007 ($25, the Spirited Gourmet) Primarily garnacha, carineña and cabernet sauvignon, this wine from the mountainous Priorat zone on Spain's Catalan coast is made from grapes grown in rocky black-slate soil. It's got a velvety richness, with a spicy licorice-and-pepper edge to the black cherry flavors. Lingering and savory, it's a great match for wood-grilled tuna steaks.

✳ Bodega DiamAndes "Gran Reserva" Mendoza, Argentina, 2007 ($40, Cambridge Wine & Spirits) Crafted high up in the Uco Valley, this is mostly malbec, with 30 percent cabernet sauvignon added for structure. Owned by a producer from Bordeaux (where they know a bit about blending), it's got a silky, palate-coating chocolate flavor and a finish of mineral earthiness. Outstanding with grilled beef.

Conservation Effort

In today's food era, you can't open a market and not sell pickles. In fact, Kirby's Kitchen owner Bob Botchie, who cut his teeth at Myers + Chang and Erbaluce, preserves 30 pounds of cukes every week, which he sells by the plate and the jar at his new shop/cafe in Everett. The business is all about preservation—from the jams, salamis and terrines to the name on the door (a tribute to his grandmother). Not to mention the vault in the old bank building's basement, where Botchie plans to age his own cheddar, gouda and Parmesan.

JEAN THERAPY

TO THE POORLY DRESSED MEN OF THIS CITY: I get it. People love broken-in denim or threadbare T-shirts that are packed with memories and mac 'n' cheese stains. But let's keep those comforts at your apartment. Do you think you look good strolling down Newbury Street with holes in your clothing and frayed jeans scraping grime from the sidewalk? Get it together, people. You're doing nothing to help Boston's reputation as a poorly dressed city.

Makeovers wanted

To Solitude-seeking Sally from the Feb. 1 issue: I highly doubt a man called you a b* for crossing the street at "an appropriate time." Was there a walk signal the entire time? A more realistic scenario has you slowly meandering across traffic as this man waited for you to turn onto the same street. There are two sides to every story. Just be thankful you aren't a part of his miserable life and get over it!

Doubting Donna

To the couple fighting about dinner on Mass. Ave. on Jan. 29: If the biggest problem in your relationship is chicken or pasta, you should probably just shut the hell up and hug it out. Really. The level of anger apparent in your voices as you argued through Central Square is telling of two things: Either you have some serious issues that manifested in this mealtime squabble, or you are both so absurdly happy in every aspect of your life that this is the only gripe you can find. Why not have chicken parmigiana and compromise?

HOLY TERROIR

A pilgrimage to cabernet country

BED AND BEYOND The treeline cottage room offers a cozy perch to take in the scenery.

NAPA VALLEY EVOKES images of lush abundance. Rows of pendant grapes unfurl in jade green, scrolling into the horizon. Baskets of tourists float under bright balloon canopies chasing the sun. Shiny wine glasses stand at attention like crystalline footmen. Those idyllic associations might hold true in the warmer seasons, but a visit to the famed Northern California region in winter highlights qualities lost during the peak rush: the rugged landscape, the elegant simplicity of its cuisine and the magical way a sip of its most popular export, cabernet sauvignon, can unlock the nuances of the soil.

If refined yet comfortable surroundings appeal to you, check into Meadowood, a resort with spacious rooms decorated in a Pottery Barn aesthetic. White-washed wood rafters, slipcovered sofas and a neutral palette of taupe signal modesty, but the Frette linens, Molton Brown bath products and country club facilities are purest decadence. Located in St. Helena, about a two-hour drive northeast from San Francisco International Airport, the hotel is a distillation of the area's best features. The Restaurant at Meadowood boasts three-stars from Michelin (the only other three-star restaurant in the state is the French Laundry, a couple of towns over), and the property includes four and a half miles of walking trails on sloping hills that yield vistas of native vegetation packed with wild turkeys and deer. If you're a wine novice, the onsite master sommelier can customize a guided tour.

Since it's a special circle of hell to be the designated driver in wine country, book a chauffeur with Beau Wine Tours. The company's drivers are experts in the region's history, and also in its gossip. They'll spin colorful stories about the old wine-making families as they transport you to the mission-style Mondavi estate. Most often

If you're planning on dining at the Restaurant at Meadowood, note that it's closed for renovations until March 22.

Stock up on picnic provisions at the Oxbow Public Market, located in the city of Napa, where you can pick up specialty cheeses and charcuterie for an impromptu feast.

DRINK IT IN The Robert Mondavi Winery

associated with its budget label, Woodbridge, Robert Mondavi also bottles impressive higher-end vintages. Bypass the lines upstairs and opt for an exclusive cellar tour, where you might be treated to the 2005 cab, with its salty Kalamata notes redolent of the neighboring olive trees. Also carve out time to visit Cakebread in Rutherford, where the grapes are sourced from locations picked for their unique growing conditions. Make sure to sample the small-batch cab from Dancing Bear Ranch, which gets its intense, spicy notes from the rocky earth.

Bold, robust cabs require high-protein and high-fat foods that can stand up to them. You'll find both at Thomas Keller's brasserie Bouchon. Roasted meats, terrines and foie gras aplenty are ideal accompaniments to a day on the wine trail. For a meal to linger over, however, head to Redd, Richard Reddington's acclaimed restaurant. Creative dishes like sole with creamy jasmine rice, clams, chorizo and a saffron curry nage are skillful plays on California's diverse seasonal ingredients. Should you feel your palate needs some fine-tuning, stop by the Culinary Institute of America, located in a grand stone monastery. There, you can take quick flavor tutorials on topics ranging from olive oil and chocolate, to, of course, wine.

There's nothing wrong with a good Bacchanalia, but Napa is no Cancún. Its fine vintages and cuisine benefit from a slower, more contemplative tour. With hundreds of wineries in the region, you'll have to make peace with the fact that you won't be able to experience everything in one trip. ✖✖✖

ILLUMINATED TRUTHS

Sold with flash and flair, Red Lantern can appeal with its food.

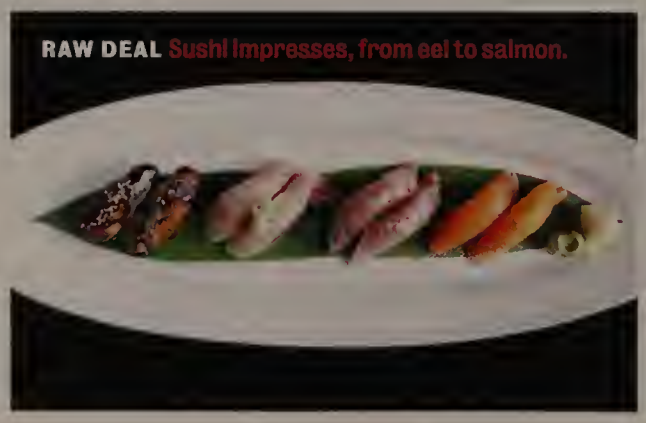
Red Lantern
39 Stanhope St., Boston
(617-262-3900)
redlanternboston.com



BATTER UP Fried beans with spicy, herbal and sweet dipping sauces

RED LANTERN IS AN elaborately appointed restaurant that roosts, incongruously, over the Mass. Pike. Its impressive, heavy oak doors lead to a club-like dining room with a soaring ceiling traversed by steel girders hung with Chinese lanterns. Seating beckons by the bar, a small sushi area, a spectator's station facing the open kitchen and in odd nooks and corners. It's a pan-Asian food emporium with a decor that hovers between grand and grandiose. Not bad for a space that used to be a Bertucci's.

While the loungeyness and dim lighting at Red Lantern give it a club-like atmosphere, I had been assured that serious culinary people were in control. The first two dishes I tasted—duck buns ($8) and pan-fried pork gyoza ($10)—confirmed that claim. The luscious duck, seasoned with chili and cilantro and moistened with hoisin, sank into ultra-light steamed buns, while the half dozen dumplings combined delicacy with robust pork flavor enhanced by a garlicky dressing and a sprinkling of crispy fried shallots. Deliciousness, too, justified the high price of the wok-fried Singapore street noodles ($22). Thin vermicelli noodles tossed with shrimp, tiny scallops and nuggets of pork in Madras curry and XO sauce made for a kaleidoscope of lingering flavors.

Moving to sushi, the salmon ($6), yellowtail ($8) and toro ($12) tasted impeccably fresh while the BBQ eel ($7) arrived with a superb coating of a sweet-savory marinade. Side dishes of wok bok choy and garlic ($5) and wood-grilled asparagus ($6) gave a lively counterpoint to the rich fish. Tempura beans ($8) and rock shrimp ($14) both arrived hot and light with the flavors beneath their crispy exteriors intact. Coconut Sriracha sauce elevated the heat level of the shrimp, while spicy macadamia nuts gave the dish a welcome crunch.

RAW DEAL Sushi impresses, from eel to salmon.

After this delightful sampling, however, the wheels came off the Red Lantern express. Chicken ($11) and shrimp ($12) fried rice tasted substandard. Pork chow fun ($16) proved bland beyond belief, especially in contrast to the earlier dishes. Moreover, the aggressive pricing of all three of these staples, particularly given the sparseness of the proteins, was shocking. Most disappointing of all was the broken lobster ($39), one of the menu's most expensive offerings. The rubberiness of the partially shelled lobster suggested a too-long stay in an insufficiently hot wok. Also texturally deficient was a mix of vegetables (save for crunchy asparagus), rice and what appeared to be some kind of breading, although the darkness of the room made it hard to identify. Perhaps the buildup of the broken lobster in other reviews had unfairly raised my expectations, but the dish felt like a broken promise.

Charles' Picks

Happily, the kitchen redeemed itself with desserts. A trio of crème brûlées ($9) charmed, as the flavors of passion fruit, hibiscus and coffee complemented one another from one spoonful to the next. Pineapple bread pudding ($10) and tempura bananas ($9) tasted seductively sweet.

Beverages at Red Lantern include an extensive list of sugary cocktails, an abbreviated selection of beers, a pricey wine list and an excellent choice of sakes. The house sake, served warm in a small carafe ($8), provides an easy introduction before graduating to the superb, semi-filtered Pearl Nigori Momokawa ($14), a rich, aromatic drink from Oregon.

Red Lantern is a very pleasant venue for meeting new people or spending time with old friends. And, so long as you choose carefully and avoid the few high-priced misses, the kitchen produces decent to delightful food. It's easy to take a shine to the place. ✖✖✖

TOWERING PERFORMANCE

Harrelson tries to save this struggling flick.

Rampart ★★

Starring Woody Harrelson, Robin Wright, Cynthia Nixon, Anne Heche, Sigourney Weaver, Ben Foster, Ned Beatty and Ice Cube. Written by James Ellroy and Oren Moverman. Directed by Oren Moverman. At Boston Common.

ARE WE AT LAST PREPARED to admit that Woody Harrelson has grown into one of the greatest actors of his generation?

It may sound like balderdash to fans of his friendly barkeep on Cheers, but there's a slippery sociopathy hiding just beneath his drawl, which director Oliver Stone seemed to pull out of nowhere for Natural Born Killers. Harrelson has always been a brilliant comedian, but something more sinister is lurking behind his eyes.

He hasn't made it easy to be a fan. Harrelson tends to disappear for years, often more concerned with his weed-friendly dietary regimens than his movie career. Any other actor would've tried to capitalize on his brilliant performance in The People vs. Larry Flynt, but Harrelson just noodled around on Broadway and all but vanished for a decade or so.

He's back with a vengeance in director Oren Moverman's Rampart. It's a terrible movie that only works on the rare occasions when Harrelson's searing performance is allowed to shine.

Harrelson and Moverman previously worked together in The Messenger, an Iraq war drama with Harrelson's slow-burn rendition only occasionally upstaged by gratuitous long-takes and I-went-to-film-school camera shots. That well-written, well-acted movie suffered from an acute case of "Look, Ma, I'm Directing!" syndrome.

At times, Rampart is almost unwatchable, as Moverman gimmicks up every interaction with art school flourishes. Entire dialogue sequences are conducted with our only vantage point locked behind the back of a character's head, and crucial moments are so over-conceptualized that the camera often glides upwards, mid-sentence, into a distracting, unnatural angle for reasons that don't make much psychological sense.

It's a shame, because Harrelson is magnificent. The actor stars as Dave "Date Rape" Brown, a bullheaded, racist cop caught in the late 1990s Rampart division scandal that rocked L.A. Starved down to sinew and raw attitude, Dave seems to subsist on cigarettes, martinis and xenophobic bluster. The running joke in the movie is that he doesn't even eat.

But Dave's days of busting heads and torturing suspects are quickly coming to a close. Too bad he's the last one to notice. Positioned as a fall guy for the department after a Rodney King–style beating, he's suddenly up to his ears in inquiries from Sigourney Weaver. Then Steve Buscemi makes a cameo as the camera drifts away on some sort of lazy-Susan apparatus.

Dave lives in a modest suburban sprawl with his daughters and two ex-wives—who happen to be sisters. At night, he drinks his way through dinner until he's finally boozed up enough to choose a companion. (Whichever casting director picked Anne Heche and Cynthia Nixon to costar as siblings deserves some sort of special award.) Other nights he finds himself shacked up with Robin Wright's no-nonsense defense attorney, a terrible idea made all the more attractive because of how wrong it is.

Scripted by Moverman with novelist James Ellroy, Rampart will feel familiar to fans of the great writer's work. Ellroy has already made a career out of chronicling bad cops on the mean streets of L.A. If Harrelson's character rings a bell, it's because Kurt Russell already played him to perfection in the Ellroy-penned Dark Blue, and then Keanu Reeves tried his best, with less success, in 2008's Street Kings.

The difference between Rampart and those earlier Ellroy projects is that Moverman never aims for a view of the larger world. From start to finish we remain locked in the first-person worldview of Dave "Date Rape" Brown, and as his bullying way of life finally collapses around him, there's no sense of escape or relief. Moverman's annoying camera placements keep us firmly locked into the antihero's perspective, no matter how much the audience may need to take a break from him.

It's a daring gambit that ultimately proves suffocating. Harrelson is just too good at being a sociopath, and the film gets bogged down with a sorry subplot involving a dirty ex-cop played by Ned Beatty. Rampart is so narrowly focused, you'll wish just one character would provide some form of comfort.

Yet the performance still haunts. Lean, insinuating and spouting some of Ellroy's most colorful invective, Harrelson leers and slurs his way through the movie. Always teetering on the edge of violence, he's odious and magnetic. ✖✖✖

OLDER AND WISER

The Del Fuegos extend their glorious garage-rock "vacation."

The Del Fuegos
play the Paradise Rock Club on Feb. 22.

ON THE ROAD AGAIN The original Del Fuegos return to the stage after more than 20 years apart.

ONE OF 2011'S BEST concert surprises was the reunion of the Del Fuegos, the scruffy local garage-rockers who flirted with '80s fame before losing members and direction.

"We were caught up in the rock 'n' roll lifestyle," singer/guitarist Dan Zanes says of their heyday. "We were fearful kids and, speaking for myself, filled with professional jealousy—just self-centered fear in all its flavors."

But with time comes maturity. Zanes warmed to the reunion idea after his mother asked the band's original lineup to reunite in support of Right Turn, an addiction treatment program founded by Fuegos drummer Woody Giessmann.

So the Del Fuegos rocked two packed June benefits at the Paradise Rock Club, where fans sang along to fondly remembered hits like "Don't Run Wild" and "Backseat Nothing." With the ice broken, the quartet has been recording a new EP and will return to the Paradise on Feb. 22 to kick off a multi-city tour.

> While the Zanes brothers hail from New Hampshire, the group cut its teeth in dingy Boston clubs like Cantone's and the Rathskeller.

"We had a great time at the Paradise, which I guess is obvious, or we wouldn't be doing this," the 50-year-old Zanes says from his Brooklyn home. "It was more fun than I've ever had playing with those guys, and that's saying a lot, because we did have a lot of fun along the way."

Given that camaraderie, he offers one explanation for the group not reforming sooner. "It was for the best possible reason, which is that everybody has a really full life," says Zanes, now a Grammy-winning performer of family music.

Giessmann went on to launch Right Turn, and the group's other two members, bassist Tom Lloyd and Zanes' guitarist brother, Warren, broadened their horizons by earning doctorate degrees.

Lloyd pursued geochemical engineering and has since moved on to a career in investment analysis, while keeping up his musical chops as a classical cellist. Warren Zanes emerged as a singer/songwriter with fine solo albums in addition to becoming an author, professor and Rock and Roll Hall of Fame executive. Currently working on an authorized Tom Petty biography, he has since taken a post with the Rock and Roll Forever Foundation, a nonprofit founded by Steven Van Zandt.

Sibling tensions once hobbled the Fuegos, as older brother Dan dominated the writing, resulting in Warren and Giessmann quitting two years before the band's 1989 demise. "Things were really difficult for several years," Dan Zanes says of relations with his brother after the split. "But I was the best man when he got married, which is a miracle in repaired relationships, and I'm the godfather of one of his sons. We talk every day, with or without the Del Fuegos."

While the Zanes brothers hail from New Hampshire (where the Fuegos will close their current tour at the Capital Center for the Arts on March 4), the group cut its teeth in dingy Boston clubs like Cantone's and the Rathskeller. "We were doing Elvis Presley covers," Zanes recalls. "Everybody was listening to the Clash and punk rock, and we thought we were greasers.

We couldn't play very well," Zanes says. "We were limited by what we could do technically, so we shaped our vision around that." The band's lean, scrappy rock proved the right fit on L.A.'s Slash Records, home to X and Los Lobos.

Now matured as musicians, the Fuegos are making an EP in which the brothers share in the writing and may play one or two songs live. "It just seemed like an artistic challenge," he says of the album. "We have no problem being an oldies act."

In turn, the Fuegos could remain active beyond this short tour. "We probably won't say no to anything," Zanes says, "but we're really not looking beyond this two-week 'vacation.'" ✖✖✖

Q: WHAT ARE CHEMICAL PEELS AND WHAT ARE THEY USED FOR?

A: CHEMICAL PEELS ARE A CATEGORY of advanced clinical skin rejuvenation treatments that help to reverse the signs of aging and the damage of past sun exposure. They can also be used to help to control acne. The term sounds scary, but most peels are actually very mild and do not have any down time.

Each day thousands of our skin cells die, flake off and are replaced by new cells. Chemical peels speed up this process. A topical peeling solution is applied to the skin to loosen and remove the upper layers of dead and damaged skin and reveal new, fresher skin underneath. This treatment also stimulates a burst of renewal and collagen growth in the deeper layers of the skin.

There are several different types of chemical peels; the mildest peels include glycolic, lactic, and salicylic, which come in various strengths.

If you are bothered by acne, sun damaged skin, brown "age" spots, fine lines and wrinkles, dry or flaky skin, rough skin texture, uneven skin tone, excessive oil on your face, or if your skin seems to have lost its healthy, youthful glow, then chemical peels can help you.

NOT COOL

How I fail at being a hipster

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

I'VE GOT A FRIEND NAMED Brian who lives in L.A. The last time I visited, we rode fixed-gear bikes to his favorite bar, which has a sound system made from wired-together '80s boom boxes. There, we considered ordering the house pear-infused artisanal bourbon but instead drank Chimays. The bartender sported a neck tattoo and looked like she'd be equally at home working at American Apparel, which was right across the street. Brian has a horseshoe mustache, is fond of the adjective "rad" and insists that he's not a hipster.

The question of his hipster-dom, or lack thereof, arose after he made a trip to Boston and I took him out for a pub-centric tour of Beacon Hill. Given the sensibilities described above, I should've brought him to the South End for a Delux-Beehive evening. Instead, I dragged him to my favorite townie meathead establishments, places where Michelob is considered a microbrew and the bar games involve sharp metal objects—and not, say, Pong on a vintage console TV.

After he left, it occurred to me that I'd done him a disservice. "Sorry, man," I said. "I should've taken you to the hipster places." But Brian's response surprised me. "That's OK," he replied. "I'm not a hipster."

This sounded like denial, so I reminded him of the fixed-gear bikes, the boom boxes, the American Apparel strategically located in a scruffy yet appealing, up-and-coming neighborhood. "Fixed-gear bikes give you a good leg workout, and they're easy to maintain," he said. "And that American Apparel closed. Nobody around here can afford that stuff." Brian's essential argument is that an average L.A. resident is perceived as a raging hipster only in the context of Boston. He may have a point. To me, everyone in L.A. looks like a bike messenger.

I'm not trying to make fun of hipsterism, because it's pointless to mock a movement that's defined by ironical self-awareness. For instance, on an episode of the IFC show Portlandia, guests checking into a hipster hotel were handed a complimentary typewriter. This was supposed to be a joke, but I guarantee that Portland's hotel-management audience thought, "Hey, what a great idea! That would give me something to do with all my typewriters." When I stayed in Portland, my hotel had a holy book menu—as if you're going to call room service and say, "Could you send up a cheeseburger, a Diet Coke and, let's see… I guess I'll have a Koran." For a hipster, the ideal hotel is a condemned sanatorium furnished with found items and staffed by people dressed for Chester Arthur's inaugural ball.

Tressed to impress

I consider myself hipster-friendly, and I'm game for occasionally dipping a toe in those cultural waters. For instance, I recently rode my bike to a small beer store and filled up a growler with a microbrew on tap. This might be the most hipster-esque thing I've ever done, and it didn't work out too well. When I got home the beer was flat and tasted like Hulk Hogan's armpit, which is the default aroma of any oft-used growler jug. I'm sorry, hipsters, but draft beer just isn't portable. A freshly poured beer is like a rainbow or Tom Brady's smile, beautiful yet ephemeral. We're going to have to accept that and really work on perfecting our homebrews. Also, my bike is an 18-speed Specialized and doesn't look like something imagined by Jules Verne during a fever delirium.

I have Hipstamatic on my phone, but I prefer the normal non-vintage photos. Last year, I accidentally bought a pair of skinny jeans, and when I got home and tried them on I looked like an ugly girl in jeggings. I've tried to grow a mustache but quit after three weeks, when the pathetic reddish fuzz above my lip still hadn't prompted a single person to say, "Hey, are you growing a mustache?"

I suppose I have to accept the fact that I'm a meathead. I enjoy beer games that involve yelling and swinging hammers. I have no facial hair, nor do I play the banjo. Generally, I regard hats as pragmatic and weather-dependent. I could probably see myself participating in a feel-good riot, but not an angry one. I was once at a party where the neighbors called the cops and reported that we were banging on pots and pans, when actually we were playing real-life Donkey Kong with an empty keg. In high school, I test-drove a Monte Carlo SS but couldn't afford it. Hey, want to hear about an obscure new underground band that I'm into? Foster the People. They're rad. ✖✖✖

COPING WITH A SUPER BOWL HANGOVER

DROP IT Welker gets a pass.

5 SUPER BOWL LEFTOVERS

Going Limp Last issue, I mentioned how I wasn't worried about Rob Gronkowski's ankle. Of course, I'm an idiot. In the end, Gronk was very unGronk, and we'll have to wonder what could've been. In related news: I'm officially putting a bounty out on Bernard Pollard. (The reward: Free Impropers for a year.)

Missed Connection People are still arguing over that crucial, late-game incompletion to Wes Welker. Here's my take: Was it a bad pass by Brady? Yes. Could Welker have caught it? Yes. Does it matter either way? NO. Nothing's going to change the outcome and neither guy deserves to be remembered as the goat, so let's move on. In fact, let's just forget the whole game ever happened.

Speaking of Brady He's now 3-2 in the Super Bowl, and that depresses me far more than it should. Sure, I appreciate the three championships he gave us, but with every passing season, the lost opportunities like this year, and 2007, and 2006, burn deeper. (Man, it's times like this when I thank God that Brady's never retiring—EVER.)

Dance of Defeat Gronk and Matt Light's post–Super Bowl dance party has become the Pats' version of "beer and fried chicken." Like with that story line, everyone needs to relax. So they were dancing. Big deal. If it's not the end of their world, it shouldn't be the end of ours. If anything, I'm just upset that Gronk missed a chance to bring Screech Powers' "The Sprain" back into the public consciousness.

Looking Ahead The Pats still need to figure out what to do with Welker, but whatever happens, I hope they sign free agent Brandon Lloyd. For one, he has a great relationship with Josh McDaniels. He'd also be their best deep threat since Randy Moss, and their most acrobatic receiver since a rookie Terry Glenn. All in all, assuming he passes his pre-contract interview with Gisele, it's a match made in heaven.

2 GARDEN THOUGHTS

HE'S NO. 2! I thought the hype around Paul Pierce passing Larry Bird on the Celtic's all-time scoring list was a little overblown. After all, it took Pierce 88 more games, nearly 2,000 more minutes and more than 2,500 extra three-point attempts! Still, when you best Bird in anything—other than a vertical leap—you should be proud.

BUMP IN THE ROAD It was impossible for the Bruins to keep the pace they set in November, and the beginning of February has proven that. But I'm not worried. They needed to get a few losses out of their system, and if you're going to have a bad month, it might as well be the shortest one.

3 SPRING TRAINING QUESTIONS

Will Beckett Speak? The average fan isn't too concerned with what Josh Beckett has to say, but the media will kill him until he sets the record straight on September. Will he? Somehow I doubt it, but as long as he's ready to pitch, focused on winning and down a few hundred pounds from last fall, vagueness and general silence is fine by me.

How's Crawford's Wrist? We all want to believe that Carl Crawford will make amends for 2011, but off-season wrist surgery has his redemption in jeopardy. As does the fact that it took him more than a month to return a phone call from his new manager. But other than that, the Year of Carl is right on track!

Who's at Short? This winter, the Sox traded Jed Lowrie to Houston for a reliever you've never heard of, and Marco Scutaro to Colorado… for a reliever you've never heard of. That leaves them with Nick Punto, Mike Aviles and a huge question mark at short. Some say they'll go young and give Jose Iglesias a chance. But you know how I feel: Go with experience—Pesky for shortstop!

1 ONE FRIEND TURNED ENEMY

Harvard's own Jeremy Lin has taken the Big Apple by storm and earned a starting spot in the Knicks' backcourt. For now, he's the best story in basketball—it's virtual Linsanity! But we'll see what happens once Carmelo comes back and no one else is allowed to touch the ball.

4 DATES TO WATCH

2/19: Red Sox pitchers and catchers report to spring training. Last one there buys the keg!

2/22: The Patriots are back in Indianapolis. This time, for the NFL combine. And (hopefully) this time without leaving you in tears.

2/26: The NBA All-Star Game tips off in Orlando. It'll mark the hardest Dwight Howard has played under that roof all year.

2/27: The NHL trade deadline arrives. I hear the Bruins are looking to acquire a muzzle for Tim Thomas.

Soroff On JENNY SLATE

The funny woman tells us about depraved behavior, talking shells and why she hates McGruff.

COMEDIAN AND ACTOR JENNY SLATE, 29, was raised in Milton before moving to New York. After graduating from Columbia, she worked as a stand-up and eventually landed the dream job of being a cast member on Saturday Night Live during the 2009–2010 season. She has appeared in the HBO series Bored to Death and can be seen in the upcoming series Girls, premiering in April. In movies, she plays the mother of the character voiced by Zac Efron in the animated film The Lorax. In 2010, Slate cowrote and voiced the award-winning animated short film Marcel the Shell with Shoes On with her fiancé, Dean Fleischer-Camp (who directed and animated). The pair published their first book, Marcel the Shell With Shoes On: Things About Me in 2011, and it became a New York Times best seller. She lives in Los Angeles.

Jonathan Soroff: First of all, are Lucky Charms magically delicious?
Jenny Slate: Yes, they are. Definitely. But you're not supposed to eat anything but the marshmallows.

What else are they besides marshmallows?
I just eat the marshmallows. They're like aliens. They're so crunchy and good.

Mascot you'd most like to kill?
This is bad, but I really don't like McGruff. I think he's gross. I don't like what he wears. I don't like how big he is compared to real dogs, and the fact that he's supposed to be a dog means he doesn't even know how to do drugs. He can shut up.

Most depraved thing you've ever done?
I hate to say it, because I'm sure my grandmother will be reading this, but one time in college when I was really drunk, I definitely used the bathroom in ways it wasn't meant for. I'll leave it at that.

Biggest length you've ever gone to for a laugh?
One time at camp, I thought it would be really funny to just take all my clothes off and hide in a closet, then jump out when my friends came in. But only one of my friends came in, so it was awkward because we were alone.

Is laughter the best medicine?
No. If you have herpes, a giggle is not gonna kick that. Maybe if you had psoriasis and were grumpy and then all of a sudden you laughed really hard, it might clear it up. But laughter is definitely not the best medicine if there's something wrong with your genitals. Then, the best medicine is Valtrex.

Why does Boston produce so many funny people?
Good question. I think Boston is filled with characters. It's a combination of being very old and proper, very parochial. I think there's the temptation to be a little outrageous and make some noise. Just look at the South Shore Plaza. It's like a one-woman show.

How close are you to the stoner character you play on Bored to Death*?*
Fairly close, in that I think there's nothing wrong with smoking pot in a responsible way. And I think she's a very dreamy person, and I'm that way. But I don't dress like her, nor would I ever want to have a threesome. I'm too scatterbrained. I need to focus on one person, and the idea of more than one sexual act going on at the same time confuses me.

Your biggest idiosyncrasy?
I'm incredibly timid in cars and afraid of the dark. I'm pretty timid in general, physically. I'm afraid of getting hurt. Those people who are like, "Oh, it'll be so fun to hike up this mountain!" I'm immediately freaking out and want to kill myself.

You dropped the F-bomb on Saturday Night Live. How much do you think that cost?
I think it was past a certain time in the evening, so it didn't cost anything. But no one ever discussed it with me.

Was SNL like working in a pressure cooker?
Not for me. I really enjoyed it. It was a lot like freshman year in college. Very fun and free.

Whose idea was Marcel the Shell With Shoes On*?*
Both Dean and mine together. I started doing the voice, and then he just started asking the questions.

What kind of shell is she?
Well, Marcel is a boy, first of all…

What? I've always assumed he was a she!
Nope. Marcel is a boy. A lot of people think that, but I'm not sure how gender-specific we really have to get, especially since there's a lot of pink going on in the wardrobe department.

What's one thing you'd never joke about?
Eating disorders. It's just not funny. There are so many women with eating disorders, and I don't have a way to make that funny. If someone does, go ahead, but I can't find a way to do that, and the idea of a woman in the audience feeling shame when she probably already feels that makes me want to shut up forever.

Favorite comedian of all time?
I really love Bill Murray. But I was also always obsessed with Madeline Kahn and Carol Burnett.

What did your parents say when you told them you wanted to become a comedian?
They always knew it was coming. I never had a backup plan. No plan B. And not because I'm so confident. I just always knew this was what I'd do.

Is stand-up dead?
No! It's very alive and changing and growing.

Don't you have to watch everything you say?
No. You have to watch what you say in interviews. I once did an interview where I mentioned Lactaid pills, and he wrote it as lactate pills, like I was taking something to make milk come out of my breasts. It was so embarrassing.

Three adjectives to describe you?
Bubbly…

You said ugly?
[Laughs.] Bubbly! And kind. And spazzy. ×××

COLLABORATIVE SPACES GROW BIG IDEAS.

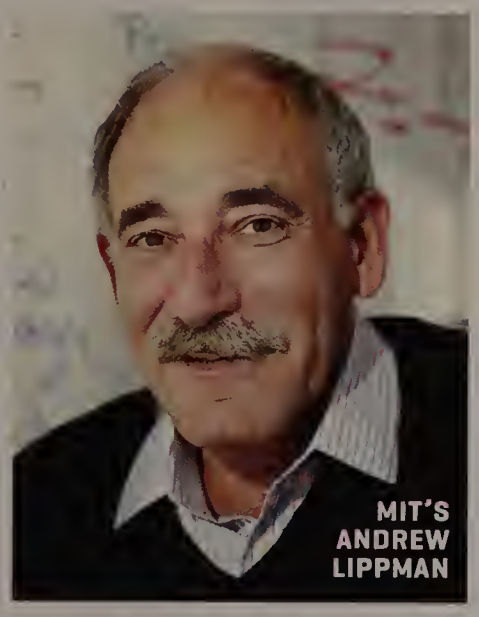
CREATIVE SPARKS

On any given day at Somerville Artisans Asylum, members may be welding metal sculptures, carving wood, designing robots or sewing fabric on a shared ma

THE ORIGIN STORY OF APPLE BEGINS IN A GARAGE. In this narrative, Steve Jobs and Steve Wozniak toiled away in a place reserved for machines at rest, in disuse, to cobble together their grand idea. But before the garage, there was the Homebrew Computer Club, where, according to Wozniak, equally crucial work happened. "Without computer clubs," he writes in Digital Deli, a history of early computing, "there would probably be no Apple computers." At these gatherings, Jobs surrounded himself with engineers, hobbyists, pranksters and passionate misfits who met to trade electronic components and knowledge. While these educational/social functions took place at different venues, they always involved solving technical or sourcing problems for individual projects, including the fateful one in the garage.

Those legendary computer clubbers would feel right at home at the Artisan's Asylum near Union Square, a 31,000-square-foot space cavernous enough to house a woodshop, welding area, computer lab and more than one hundred studios. Members zip by on skateboards and scooters. A pterodactyl sculpture from a workshop producing dinosaur models soars mid-flight over a neighboring team. Sounds from whirring machines carry from the machine shop, where a handful of aspiring carpenters are bent over planks. The only barrier separating their highly flammable materials and the sparks ignited in the welding area is a stiff plastic curtain. Being able to see people engrossed in their work, hear the buzz of construction and banter at semi-regular potlucks keeps the Artisans' community motivated.

The value of community and serendipity is what's driving the wild-fire emergence of hybrid workspaces in Boston, Cambridge and Somerville. In places like Artisan's Asylum, experimentation and entrepreneurship intersect, engineers work next to artists and their collaborations fuel creativity.



"Each of the coworking spaces has its own flavor," says Mimi Graney, executive director at Union Square Main Streets, an organization that promotes Somerville businesses and organizes events. "Some have continued to stay very tech-oriented." Like Kendall Square's Dogpatch Labs, for example, which is backed by a venture capital group hoping to foster the next Facebook. In exchange for first pickings of promising IPOs, Polaris Venture Partners gives startups necessities like desks, conference rooms, bandwidth and a street address, as well as amenities like free coffee, pizza, snacks and an open, relaxed work environment. Dogpatch knows its audience when it advertises itself as "sorta like frat houses for geeks."

According to Graney, the first local wave of coworking spaces crested in the 2000s, starting in Cambridge. "Young guys would take over an apartment and make it into offices," she says. "The standard thing would be pizza every Friday, beer on tap, loud parties, a lot of guys in their 20s and very tech-oriented." These impromptu frat-houses became more professional as the downturn in the economy opened up new real estate for them to rent. Often a tech upstart would sublet from a bigger business that was downsizing, then take over the whole floor when the larger business capsized.

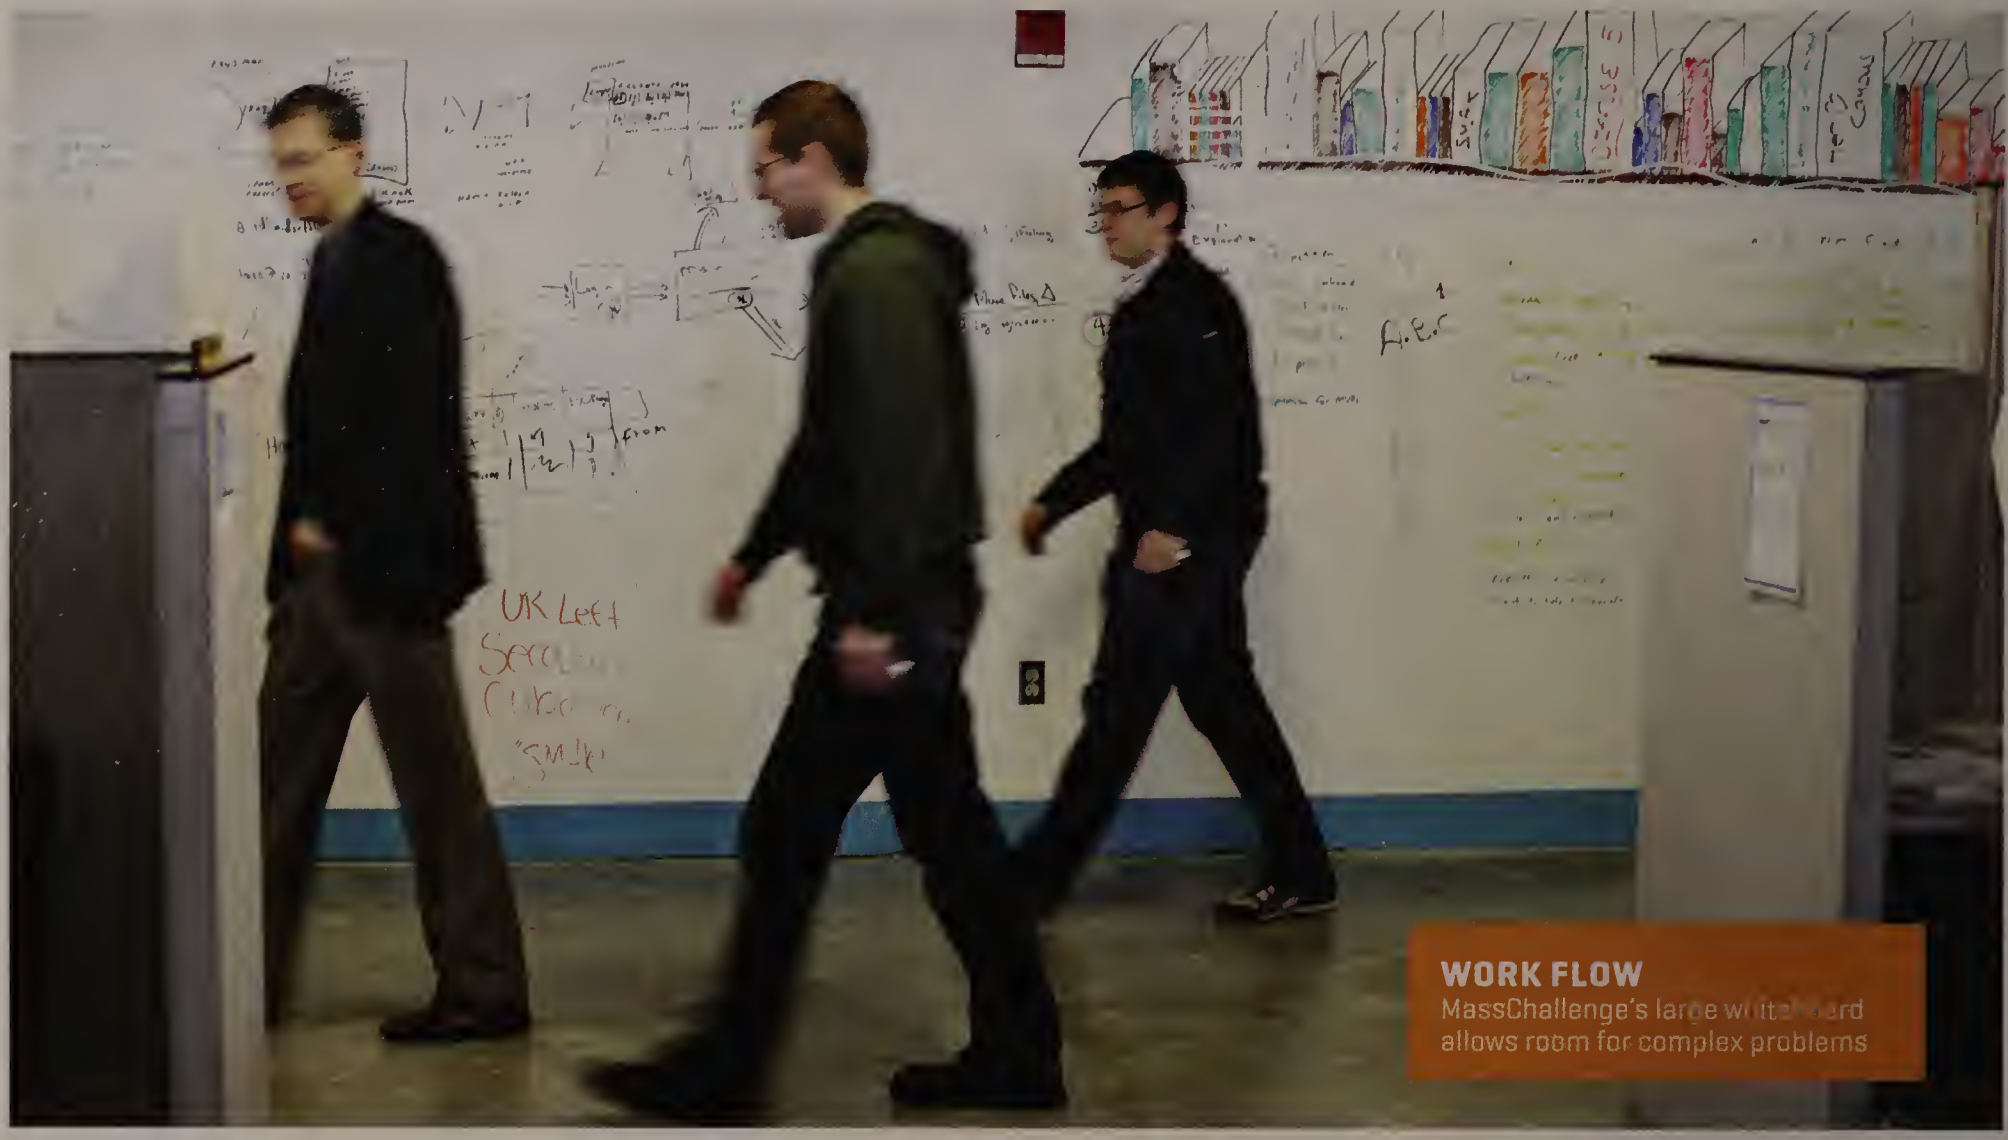
Entrepreneurs who aren't lucky enough to catch the eye of a venture capital firm on their own can compete for MassChallenge's annual one-million-dollar prize. The money is just a nominal motivator; the real rewards are the networking opportunities and office resources allocated to some 125 startups selected to share a 27,000-square-foot floor, donated by developer

Joe Fallon, in a Fan Pier high-rise. Started in 2010 by business school graduates John Harthorne and Akhil Nigam, MassChallenge's hodgepodge of startups gets mentors from partner organizations and rare access to top investors. The office is a beehive of activity, where finalists work alongside peers with projects in a range of high-growth industries. They have use of legal advice, office cubes and a whiteboard so massive it's being certified by Guinness World Records. Collaborations range from a biotech developing treatments for blindness to a company that delivers artisanal wines to customers' homes. And for motivation, the entrepreneurs just need to look out their floor-to-ceiling windows on the waterfront to imagine themselves as masters of the universe.

Academia, too, is seeing a new generation of workspaces, like the Harvard i-lab (Hi for short) in the Allston building that was formerly home to WGBH. Director Gordon Jones describes the i-lab, which opened last November, as a startup, an experiment in bringing together students and resources from schools across the university. Harvard students have access to the center's classes and its experts, but retain rights to their own intellectual property. The center also hosts workshops like "Startup Secrets: Company Formation," taught by venture capitalist Michael Skok, with some of the seats reserved for the public. A circular open-floor plan, exposed ceiling and IdeaPainted surfaces sprinkled with inspirational quotes evoke the dorm rooms and hacker spaces that might lure the next Mark Zuckerberg, and maybe even keep him from dropping out this time.

MIT'S ANDREW LIPPMAN

"Part of what this is about," Jones says, "even in the building design, is high modularity. It's intentionally unfinished. This is about all of us building this place together." Instead of an office, Jones sits in an approachable, small cubicle. The intermixing of people who wouldn't have met in a traditional classroom pays off. For example, a biology graduate's thoughts on natural selection influenced a business school student's theories on company performance.



> "It's like the internet... It was designed with no grown-up supervision."

If the i-lab is equivalent to a giant dorm room, then the MIT Media Lab is a futuristic city of interlocking glass-cubed labs and offices. This high-tech incubator produces working models of ideas that might've been hallucinated by Philip K. Dick: clothes with electronics woven into the fabric, or an electric car that folds to a third of the size of a sedan and stacks into other cars like a shopping cart (the car will be manufactured by a Spanish firm in late 2013 or early 2014). Andrew Lippman, associate director of MIT Media Lab, credits these kinds of ideas to the atmosphere and design of the Media Lab itself. "It's very much like the internet," he says of the importance of giving free rein to designers, artists and scientists. "One of the reasons [the Web] worked out like it did was because it was designed with no grown-up supervision. There were no economics associated with it; it could be done as well as the people who were doing it wanted it to be."

ROOM TO GROW
The Media Lab cultivates an [illegible] blurring the line between work and play [illegible] artists, engineers and designers.

WORK FLOW
MassChallenge's large whiteboard allows room for complex problems

The Media Lab's roots date back to the late '60s, when computing was poised to directly impact people's daily lives. Recalls Lippman, "There was a lot of personal cooperation in those days. The areas which we, the people who started the Media Lab, were concerned with were considered loosey-goosey concepts that didn't have a legitimate scientific [name] yet, because they were just not mature. Like a human interface, computer graphics and speech."

Renovated last year by Tokyo-based Maki and Associates, an addition brought the total space to 163,000 square feet housed in an aluminum and glass facade. Standing in the upper atrium, where a high-traffic ping-pong table sits next to a comfortable couch, Lippman and his colleagues can easily see into each other's workspaces. "Most of what we do is right there," he says, sweeping his eyes over the light-filled hub of interlocking laboratories and offices. "The hope and dream is to encourage people to engage themselves in what everybody else is doing. You want to open it to all your friends and colleagues."

Whereas Cambridge's coworking spaces, both academic and industry, tend to be tech-oriented, Somerville's workspaces are more community-driven. "It's not about making millions of dollars," Graney says. She started the Design Annex, a 1,400-foot center housed in Union Square's former police station, so that designers of all stripes, who would normally work out of their home, would have 24/7 access to a place free from domestic interruptions. Since the Annex is part of a global network, members, for the price of a monthly gym membership, can use workspaces or conference rooms to conduct meetings anywhere in the world.

While Annexers tend to be designers already established in their careers, another building houses a panoply of fledgling businesses. Located in a 4,400-square-foot warehouse set back from the street, Fringe comprises 20 people and 16 companies—ranging from cult brewery Pretty Things Beer & Ale Project to a roof-garden business, Recover Green Roofs. There are coworking days when Fringe opens its brightly colored conference room to people looking for a place to work, and even provides them with free coffee. Businesses pay for space per square foot, and they can partition and decorate their offices to any taste. Custom-bike builders have a utilitarian shop next to a space shared by a video producer and studio photographer, which is overseen by a salvaged piece of Shepard Fairey street art depicting Andre the Giant. Every business is deliberately different, as meticulously curated as if it were part of an art exhibition.

The lack of overlapping competition at Fringe means that skills and services are routinely shared. Mechanical and electrical engineer Aaron Panone, who works independently and at Tangible Design, credits his Fringe colleagues for bringing to market his and Joshua Resnikoff's Cuppow. It's a drinking lid that turns canning jars into portable cups. "Since we're not walled off from each other," Panone explains, "it's easier to source other people's skills." His neighbor, Natalya Zahn, an illustrator, designed Cuppow's packaging, and Fringe operation Repeat Press printed it. The small run of Cuppows they distributed sold out in two days. "The more that this space grows and matures, the more obvious the advantages of working here," Panone says. "Being in this space is one of the best things that ever happened to not only my process, but also my career."

The exact dimensions of that career are as open-ended as Fringe's physical space itself. "We're finding our bread and butter: what we're happiest doing and what pays the bills best. But since we're able to do so many different things on different projects, we're able to naturally find what that is. It's like we're all in school right now; a lot of these projects are equivalent to a master's thesis. It's for fun."

Back at the Artisan's Asylum, workers heft welding equipment, run lathes and screenprinters, and tinker in the computer lab. Students swing by for classes on costume building or bookbinding, or how to eat fire. With 40 studios recently added, 120 members, from engineers to woodworkers, share eye-level cubicles. "It was important to us to not have rabbit warrens of studios," says Molly Rubenstein, director of operations. "We're trying to take out all the stops between having a creative idea and executing it. And one of the things that gets in the way is simply not having the ongoing motivation. Having the attention of a community, someone who notices when progress isn't made on a project, or alternatively, seeing inspiration. All of these things are crucial to the energy of the Asylum."

In such a stimulating environment, it's almost impossible not to feel inspired, claims Brandon Stafford. Stafford uses his Asylum studio to manufacture the Rascal, an open-source computer that people can customize to control things remotely, like their thermostat, through the Web. He was chatting with fellow member Dan Sternof Beyer, who was working on interactive art for the Greenway, when they realized how complementary their interests were. So they decided to collaborate on a piece which would allow visitors to change the light pattern of a large installation with their smartphones. Says Stafford bemusedly, "It's almost creepy the way collaboration happens here." ×××

GAME THEORY

HOW ONE SMALL STUDIO BECAME A MAJOR PLAYER

BY NICK ALTSCHULLER

The headquarters sits down the road from Quincy Center, past the joke shop, near the comic book store and above a business specializing in hearing aid repair. Inside, it's a maze of short stairs and high-traffic carpeting, a low-rent office study sketched by M.C. Escher.

Behind an unmarked door stretches an expanse of workstations, each chair filled, each desk topped with screens packed with codes and colors. It's dimly lit and the shades stand drawn, while the air hangs heavy with the heat of whirring processors and the scent of junk food. The space is silent save for soft taps and clicks, and the rare whisper floats unhindered from one end of the room to the other. This is crunch time at Irrational Games, creators of one of this century's most acclaimed titles, BioShock. It's the state's most important piece of a 65-billion-dollar industry.

In the early 1990s, Irrational creative director Ken Levine was a young playwright who chased his dream out to Hollywood. He scored a rewriting job with Paramount and quickly became a hot commodity. But the project was never filmed, and as his money ran out his luster faded. Looking for help, he reached out to a major agent. "I said, 'You're a really big agency. I'm afraid I'd get lost there.' He said 'Kevin, trust me, you won't get lost.'"

Having failed as a screenwriter, the New York native moved back east and worked odd jobs in computer consulting and graphic design while grappling with where to take his next step. The inglorious kick forward arrived in a moment scrubbed of cliché.

"I was turning 30, and I went to a high school reunion. And you know that classic story of when the nerdy kid goes to the reunion and the football hero's now fat and balding and kind of a loser, and the nerdy kid is really successful?" he asks. "That didn't happen to me. The captain of the football team was actually a pretty nice guy. He was great looking, had a beautiful wife and a great business. And I was by myself and really unhappy, and I was like, 'Oh man, I gotta change something.'"

Combining his love of storytelling with his love for computers, Levine began searching for openings in the video game industry. Although he had no experience, he scored a job as a designer for a company in Cambridge called Looking Glass Studios, most famous for System Shock, a game in which a man wakes from a coma to find himself the sole human left in a space station populated with mutated creatures.

Less than two years later, and without ever having completed a full production cycle on a title,

PLAYERS

Irrational creative director Ken Levine, director of product development Tim Gerritsen and art director Nate Wells.

Levine and two coworkers left Looking Glass to found Irrational Games in 1997. Their first critical success came in 1999, when, in collaboration with Looking Glass, they released System Shock 2. It didn't sell many copies, but the game became the studio's artistic calling card. Years later, publisher Take-Two Interactive bought Irrational's idea for the game's spiritual successor, BioShock.

Released in 2007, BioShock won immediate plaudits as a leap forward in gaming. On the surface, it resembles many first-person shooters—a genre including System Shock 2 and more famous titles like Doom and Call of Duty—in which the player is given the protagonist's point of view and only the character's weapon-wielding hands can be seen on screen. What set BioShock apart was how the gameplay incorporated role-playing elements, with the ability to increase your capabilities in certain skills. It also advanced the role of morality in video games. In BioShock, your character comes across mutated little girls. Guarding each child is a Big Daddy, a genetically enhanced human in a monstrous diving suit—an antagonist that's now one of gaming's most iconic characters. Defeating a Big Daddy presents you with a choice: Saving the girls is the ethical thing to do, but killing them and draining them of their essence gives you more power in an increasingly dangerous environment.

Much of BioShock's critical praise focused on Levine's work as a storyteller. As gamers have grown in number and matured in age, players who began with Pitfall! are ready to be challenged by more than pixelated obstacles and enemies. As creative director, Levine introduced adult themes and philosophical questions. He imagined an underwater city called Rapture, and though it's not directly stated, the city was built as a laissez-faire utopia founded on the tenets of Ayn Rand's theory of objectivism. As in System Shock, your character arrives to find the environment fallen into disarray. You're tasked with locating Rapture's creator, Andrew Ryan, and discovering what role your own free will had in the metropolis' downfall.

BioShock garnered numerous awards and accolades from both gaming sites and publications like The New York Times, which said, "BioShock can also hold its head high among the best games ever made."

BioShock's financial windfall caused Take-Two's stock to rise 10 percent, and to date the title's sold more than 5 million copies. But when the chance to make the sequel came, Levine and his team passed. "The issue was we had about two years, and to do it in two years it would have to have a number of similarities, and that wasn't really our thing," says Levine, now 45. "We wanted to do something different, and that tends to take a lot more time." And so for years, the gaming public waited for Irrational's next move.

The local gaming industry has changed a lot since 2007. There have been major successes. Turbine, Inc., based in Needham, launched The Lord of the Rings Online, now the world's third-most popular massively multiplayer online role-playing game, or MMORPG. Cambridge's Harmonix Music Systems made a fortune from its Guitar Hero and Rock Band titles. But while Massachusetts is the country's fifth largest state for industry employment—with nearly 1,300 jobs according to an estimate from the Entertainment Software Association—the state's grip on gaming is slipping.

After the chart-topping popularity of music games fizzled, Guitar Hero was discontinued, Harmonix lost millions and the company laid off dozens of employees last February. Blue Fang Games in Waltham, makers of the Zoo Tycoon series, cut most of its creative team last July. Other smaller companies have simply been bought out. San Francisco's Zynga, the undisputed champ of social networking games with properties like FarmVille and Words With Friends, purchased Boston's Floodgate Entertainment and Cambridge's Conduit Labs primarily to grab their programming talent and ship them across the country.

The biggest blow came in the summer of 2010, when former Red Sox pitcher Curt Schilling moved his 38 Studios—and its just released RPG Kingdoms of Amalur—from Maynard to Providence. The impetus was a $75 million credit given to the studio with the stipulation that it would create 450 new jobs for Rhode Island. The Massachusetts government didn't make Schilling a compelling counteroffer.

Massachusetts has the educational system, entrepreneurial players and capital infrastructure to compete with any state, but, says Timothy Loew, executive director of the Massachusetts Digital Games Institute (MassDiGi), "The industry has never gotten to the critical mass that would help us grab a piece of the global marketplace."

The creation of MassDiGi is one step in what Lt. Governor Tim Murray describes as a "multi-pronged approach" to strengthening the state's presence in video games. There are now nearly 20 schools in Massachusetts that offer courses or degrees in game development and design, and in September, MassDigi—founded by Becker College and the Massachusetts Technology Collaborative—received a $500,000 federal grant. The institute's goal is to educate and connect students with local companies through collaboration and internships. Ideally, this will alleviate the state's biggest problem, which is failing to retain the talent it develops.

Money, of course, plays a large role in why labor and opportunities leave the state. While Massachusetts does a lot to assist sectors like finance and biotechnology, there are regulations and policies in place that stifle growth in gaming. Freelancer laws stipulate that companies must provide temporary workers with certain benefits, so many firms end up farming side projects out to other states or countries. Massachusetts also enforces non-compete agreements, which some argue impedes innovation by placing restrictions on workforce mobility. Then there is the question of a tax incentive.

Last February, Representative Vincent Pedone filed legislation to give video game companies a tax credit comparable to what's offered to film productions shooting in state. Similar regulations are already in place in 21 other states and Canada, and a tax credit is a major reason why companies like 38 Studios choose to work outside Massachusetts. But after a year, the bill has yet to gain traction, and it's leader, Pedone, recently stepped down from his post. Representative John Mahoney has since taken over, but it seems that as profitable as the business is—it currently outgrosses the movie industry—funding video games is a harder sell than trying to attract films and their attendant star wattage.

"It's ironic," says Tim Gerritsen, Irrational Games' director of product development. "If you look at it, where do you want to put your money? We've got 120 permanent employees. They spend all their money here. They pay their rent here. They pay their taxes here. Do you want Dane Cook? He's here for two weeks doing a film, and he's gone."

Perhaps with a lesson learned from the Schilling decision, Lt. Gov. Murray says any future tax credit would have to be tied to job creation. "When you talk about tax incentives, that's less revenue that you're receiving, so I think any kind of incentive would have to be linked to hard commitments from the private sector," he says.

Even without state assistance, Irrational has succeeded by drawing talent to Massachusetts with the quality of its games. "People go where the products are, where the smart minds are, where the creatives are," says Gerritsen. "If we were looking for the cheapest solution, we'd just move to the cheapest place in the world. We'd all make games out of Fargo, but you're not going to attract the best brains to Fargo."

It was the artistic credibility of System Shock 2 that helped Irrational grow from near one dozen employees to two. With the sweeping success of BioShock, the company swelled from a 40-person staff to triple that size. And rather than relocate, Irrational will remain in its modest, secluded digs until a renovated Quincy Center provides a more modern home base. "We didn't jump on a bandwagon and go down to Rhode Island," says Gerritsen. "This is where we are as a studio. We have a mass of people we believe in, and those people live all around the region."

In August 2010, Irrational revealed the trailer for its next project. Coming out this fall, it's been named one of the most anticipated titles of the year by gaming sites, news organizations like Time and MSNBC, and economic arbiters like Amazon.com. It will gross hundreds of millions of dollars. It will draw industry attention to the state like perhaps no game has done before. As Timothy Loew says, "It'll probably be the biggest game to ever come out of the Commonwealth."

"IT'LL PROBABLY BE THE BIGGEST GAME TO EVER COME OUT OF THE COMMONWEALTH"

Levine's inspiration for BioShock Infinite, the series' third title, came from a staid PBS documentary called America 1900. The film examines a country at a turning point, one influenced by immigration, racism and the rise of technology.

In the gameplay demo since released (and which has been viewed on YouTube millions of times), you see America on July 4, 1912. You find walls plastered in nationalist propaganda before coming across a man standing in a white gazebo, sermonizing on the dangers of foreign hordes. Then you grab a rifle meant for the cause. Suddenly, magic crows are attacking, cannon fire is raining down on your head and you're clobbering enemies while zooming around on a rail system built through a floating city in the sky.

This new setting of Columbia is like Rapture but bigger. The art design remains dramatic, but the environment is more colorful, intricate and interactive. Set pieces are grander, the action more kinetic. What remains the same is that your hero's quest isn't as simple as saving the world. As art director Nate Wells says, "Gamers are ready for more than space station X. There's other stories to tell, and we're pretty good at telling them."

Playing a former Pinkerton agent, you find yourself caught in a battle between Columbia's xenophobic founders and a heterogeneous group called the Vox Populi. From there, the story explores ideas of American exceptionalism and class warfare. It's influenced by everything from the policies of President McKinley to the formation of the Occupy Movement. The game feels timely, cinematic and just a little nerdy. But as Levine says, "Nerdiness has become democratized."

It's no coincidence that the first computer games were about wizards and space marines. "That's because the people who were interested in computers, and were buying computers for games, were the same people who were into these very nerdy things," says Levine. "But now it's broad enough that there are games on all kinds of topics."

It's the democratization of nerd culture that makes comic books cool, fantasy films win Oscars and once fringe hobbies turn very tidy profits. Levine witnessed this popular expansion at the moment of its Big Bang. "The first feeling I had that the world had any interest in the things I did was that first weekend I saw Star Wars," he says. "I saw this theater full of people, and I actually went to that movie with two cool kids from my school, and they never hung out with me. But for some reason, they were interested."

As the definition of "nerdy" changes and the audience for gaming grows, Irrational Games finds itself in a position to both surprise people and give them exactly what they're looking for. And with creative success, Irrational will bring more industry focus to Massachusetts, a state that now finds itself with one of the field's most influential studios. And with a choice. For art or profit, the pieces are in place for Massachusetts to become a player on the global stage. Whether the moves are made to realize that potential remains to be seen. »»«

"Picking one accessory first helps me choose the rest of an outfit. You find the one thing you really want to wear, and it becomes the thing you build around."

"I have a special drawer just for my pocket squares, all in different colors and patterns. I love them that much."

"Belts are a great accessory for a guy, because you can use them to create the perfect balance in an outfit. I spend hours in vintage stores looking for belt buckles."

Starring Roles

Spread Your Wings You may already know the story behind Wild Swans—Jung Chang's memoir about life for women in China has sold more than 10 million copies worldwide. The searing portrayal of injustice and abuse created a flurry of controversy, and it remains banned in China today. The American Repertory Theater's adaptation, running through March 11 at the Loeb Drama Center, combines Chang's themes of courage, hope and survival with lush scenery and a cast featuring Harry Potter star Katie Leung. Shelby Carignan

Albert Nobbs ★ ½ Glenn Close first played tranny butler Albert Nobbs some 30 years ago onstage, and during her career-long battle to bring George Moore's short story to the screen, she somehow forgot to resize her performance for the cameras. Decked out in a suit borrowed from Charlie Chaplin, Close stars in this vanity project as a woman posing as a man so she can find work in a Dublin hotel. It's a hideous turn, plastered with prosthetic makeup and overcommitted gestures that are supposed to signal repression. (I considered moving my seat a few rows back, just to get some distance from the performance.) There's much ado about a woman's role in the workplace and some proto-feminist claptrap that must've seemed revelatory a few decades ago. As it stands, this is the least fun episode of Bosom Buddies ever. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Carnage ★★★★ Sublime. Roman Polanski's dyspeptic adaptation of Yasmina Reza's Tony Award–winning God of Carnage traps two aging yuppie couples in an upscale Brooklyn apartment, then watches all pretense of civilized behavior gradually disintegrate. Their kids have gotten into a scuffle at recess, so the school demands that these parents meet to talk out the punishment. Passive-aggressive sniping abounds, until finally the Scotch comes out and all bets are off. Jodie Foster embodies a brittle limousine liberal until finally falling to pieces at the provocations of her lummox husband, John C. Reilly. Kate Winslet boozes around in pearls as a prissy mom fed up with her career-obsessed partner (Inglourious Basterds' Christoph Waltz, who never stops talking on his cell phone). Polanski's offhandedly elegant compositions map the ebbs and flows of this battle royale, all within the confines of one living room. Side-splittingly funny, it's like Edward Albee and Luis Buñuel got stuck in an elevator together. Carnage feels like a microcosm of both everything that matters and nothing of any consequence whatsoever. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Contraband ★★ ½ Not half-bad for a rainy afternoon time-killer. The Artist Formerly Known as Marky Mark is a former drug smuggler, reluctantly lured back into the life by double-barreled threats from Giovanni Ribisi and Ben Foster. Just one of those scenery-chewing bit players would have sufficed, so watching them work together feels redundant. Lucky for us, J.K. Simmons arrives to carve up even more ham. Directed by Baltasar Kormákur, Contraband looks fast and cheap, a low-rent quality befitting its grimy New Orleans shipyard setting. Poor Kate Beckinsale is stuck with a bottle-job hairdo, feigning lower-class status while Wahlberg takes command of the picture. He's grown into a reliable B-movie player, carrying scenes purely on authenticity and belligerence. This will never be confused with high art, and there's not a twist you can't see coming a mile away. But as far as throwaway January genre pictures go, you can do a lot worse. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Descendants ★★★ Despite never quite buying him as a cuckold, I enjoyed George Clooney's rumpled everyman turn in Alexander Payne's latest feature, adapted from Kaui Hart Hemmings' 2007 novel. When his cheating wife is critically injured in a boating accident during the opening credits, Clooney needs to step up and take charge of his family for the first time. The Descendants' plotless middle hour is particularly fantastic. Shailene Woodley's coltish awkwardness plays to the hesitation present in Clooney's relationship with his teen daughters, and Payne has a knack for letting scenes breathe and allowing his characters to surprise us. The central action in this very funny and often quite sad movie is Clooney stepping back and reevaluating everything and everybody he once took for granted. It feels like a transitional film for Payne, who has lost his young-man pitilessness and here reaches for a more accepting tone. It grows on you. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

Extremely Loud and Incredibly Close ★ Gross is the only word I'd use to describe director Stephen Daldry's adaptation of Jonathan Safran Foer's widely lambasted 2005 best seller. He's a wretched filmmaker who receives Academy Award nominations on a semiannual basis for transforming well-regarded books like The Hours and The Reader into star-studded features that nobody would ever sit through a second time. Foer's literary conceit is that 9/11 turned us all into a nation of lost children, and so it goes that we must follow Oskar, a boy who lands somewhere on the Asperger's spectrum and lost his father on that miserable September morning. Suffering from a movie-cute aversion to public transportation and hyper-edited panic attacks, Oskar isn't a character so much as an assemblage of quirks, a precocious proto-hipster who'll presumably be writing for McSweeney's before his 13th birthday. It's not actor Thomas Horn's fault that this is one of the most obnoxious characters with whom I've ever been trapped in a dark room. He was obviously directed that way. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Girl With the Dragon Tattoo ★★ Proving that if you put a silk hat on a pig, it's still a pig, super-producer Scott Rudin corralled a frightening amount of talent for a newfangled Xerox of Stieg Larsson's best-selling phenomenon, which was already dragged out into a trifecta of Swedish movies just a couple years ago. Better acting, better cinematography, but in the end it's still just a rapey episode of Cold Case. Daniel Craig stars as the disgraced journalist roped into solving a 40-year-old murder on a remote island. Rooney Mara mesmerizes as the iconic Lisbeth Salander, a feral, wounded abuse victim with Goth superhero powers, once again trapped within a story sadly content to abandon her on the sidelines. Director David Fincher attempts to infuse this airport novel with the gravitas of his triumphant Zodiac by dwelling on the minutiae of the investigative process at comically absurd length. Save for Mara's searing performance, there's nothing new here. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Haywire ★★★ Bored genius Steven Soderbergh sets his sights on the direct-to-video martial-arts market with this oddity, a trashy thriller photographed like an art film. Retired MMA superstar Gina Carano stars as Mallory Kane, a private black-ops contractor betrayed by her lover/employer (an unctuous Ewan McGregor) and left to fend for herself in a collection of dustups and beat-downs. All but helpless when it comes to line readings, Carano is a force of nature whenever her physicality does the talking. Coasting on David Holmes' jazzy score and the grace of his star, Soderbergh slyly makes light of a hacky screenplay by his Limey scribe Lem Dobbs, pacing through formula beats from angles you've never seen. The fights are extraordinary—always shot in long, steady takes accentuating Carano's superhuman physical conditioning. The overqualified supporting cast includes Michael Fassbender, Antonio Banderas and a deadpan Michael Douglas. This is slumming in style. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Grey ★★★ ½ Arriving right on time for your midwinter fix of Liam Neeson badassery is director Joe Carnahan's survivalist nightmare. There are two surprises here. The first: Neeson isn't running around exotic locales knocking teeth out of Eurotrash baddies. This time he's fighting wolves. The second: This is a damn good movie. When his plane crashes en route to Anchorage, Neeson leads a motley band of oil company workers on a trek through inhospitable terrain. These men aren't suffering from the illusion that their employer cares enough to come looking for them, and the dwindling supplies and weather should be more than enough to do our boys in, provided they can keep from killing each other first. Oh, and don't forget the wolves. The Grey is a no-frills tale of Man vs. the Elements, and it'd all be unthinkable without Neeson, who's at the center

Hay, Girl

Down to the Wire

of almost every frame, magnetic in his gravitas and grace. Then he curses out God and fistfights a wild animal. This movie is awesome. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Hugo ★★★★ Leave it to Martin Scorsese to direct a children's adventure about the importance of film preservation. Working from Brian Selznick's book, The Invention of Hugo Cabret, this miracle of a movie follows the title orphan (Asa Butterfield) as he hides out in a Parisian train station in the 1930s, winding the clocks and dodging a pratfall-riddled rent-a-cop (Sacha Baron Cohen). Meanwhile, a grumpy shopkeeper (Ben Kingsley) just might have a secret of his own. Hugo takes a sharp turn into a voluptuously helmed cinema history lesson that should be taught in schools. Scorsese employs cutting-edge digital 3-D technologies for this love letter to forgotten films, embracing the exploratory spirit of the medium's original pioneers. Hugo reminded me why I fell in love with movies in the first place. (At Boston Common, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

The Iron Lady ★ Of course Meryl Streep nails the accent and manages an eerie impression of Margaret Thatcher, it's what she does—she's Meryl fing Streep! But would it kill the greatest actress of her generation to turn up in a movie worthy of her talent? Like a companion to J. Edgar, The Iron Lady wastes a shocking amount of screen-time on a dementia-addled Thatcher doddering around her house, boozing it up in bad old-age makeup while carrying on conversations with her husband's ghost. The past 40-odd years of British history are reduced to a you-go-girl montage, complete with makeovers and sassy music cues that feel wrong juxtaposed against I.R.A. bombings. This is a shallow film that only exists as a grab for an Oscar nomination. Because Streep doesn't have enough of those already. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Man on a Ledge ★★ As befitting the dullness of the title, director Asger Leth's first feature manages to remain curiously watchable while never becoming interesting. Riotously miscast, the film stars Sam Worthington, such a blank slate of bland ruggedness that it once again took me half a movie to remember where I'd seen him before. He plays an honest cop framed for the theft of something called the Monarch Diamond—a $40 million gem belonging to Ed Harris' Trump-y blowhard. After escaping from prison, Worthington acts as advertised, stepping out on the ledge of Harris' five-star hotel, stirring up a media circus and proclaiming his innocence. Elizabeth Banks turns up as a boozy, cynical cop. (What did I tell you about the casting?) Silly me, I still wanted to see what became of the Monarch Diamond. Probably because I was hungover. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Mission: Impossible—Ghost Protocol ★★★ This franchise has always been a director's demo reel in which diverse talents take turns showing off all the different ways they can film their star/producer sprinting. It's a delivery system for action set-pieces, but Brad Bird's fourth installment has some doozies, including the greatest stunt sequence I've seen in years. The brilliant animator behind The Incredibles makes his live-action debut with an astonishing facility for conveying information in bold visual flourishes. What makes Ghost Protocol special is Bird's knack for spinning our bickering crew from one absurdly dangerous situation to another with a spatial cause and effect logic worthy of Looney Tunes. A portion of the film was shot in IMAX, and for once, it's worth the extra bucks just to see how Bird and cinematographer Robert Elswit work this film's instantly classic skyscraper centerpiece, which I watched through splayed fingers and can't wait to see again. (At Boston Common, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

My Week With Marilyn ★★ Simon Curtis' adaptation of Colin Clark's suspect memoir is a great big slab of fan-fiction—a film that follows the template of 2008's Me and Orson Welles as a banal wish-fulfillment fantasy for movie buffs. Charmless Eddie Redmayne plays Clark, an idealist with silver-screen dreams, working a thankless job on Sir Laurence Olivier's The Prince and the Showgirl. Olivier, played with what looks like a prosthetic chin by Kenneth Branagh, cast American bombshell Marilyn Monroe as his costar, assuming he'd get to sleep with her. Michelle Williams, an actress apparently incapable of giving a bad performance, is the picture's lone saving grace. The Monroe va-va-voom is very clearly just another one of Norma Jean's costume changes, and the real pleasure of Williams' work is watching her flip her sex-kitten routine on and off like a light switch. One can't help wondering what a serious movie about Marilyn Monroe might've been like with the fearless Williams in the role, but this is little more than the masturbatory fancies of Redmayne's nonentity. (In the suburbs.)

Pariah ★★ ½ Earnest, deeply felt and only slightly thin, director Dee Rees' feature debut stars the radiant Adepero Oduye as Alike, a teen poet trying to embrace her homosexuality in an awfully unfriendly New York City. Unfortunately, this obviously semiautobiographical tale hews a bit too close to the indie-movie-cliché-playbook for comfort. Did our protagonist really have to write poetry? But there's a surprisingly strong performance by Kim Wayans, of all people, as an angry, churchgoing mother, plus some stellar work from Charles Parnell as a devoted father with a few flaws of his own. Credit Rees for the density of the atmosphere, bluntly exploring an African-American subculture seldom captured on film. What the movie could've used is a subplot or two. Expanded from a Sundance-feted short film, Pariah feels awfully long at 80-odd minutes. The narrowness of its focus eventually becomes asphyxiating. (At Kendall Square.)

Red Tails ★ ½ Wasting a vital chapter of American history on yet another demo reel for his special-effects department, George Lucas strands the tale of the Tuskegee Airmen in a digital wasteland. With deliberately retro, corny dialogue meant to replicate the flying ace movies of the 1940s, Red Tails fails because it looks like a video game. I've seen less CGI in Shrek movies. Shot digitally and almost entirely in front of green-screens, there's nary a real background—or for that matter, an honest-to-God plane—in any given scene. If it wasn't already hard to take Cuba Gooding Jr. seriously, try doing it when he's awkwardly futzing with a pipe while interacting with props that don't exist. Director Anthony Hemingway is credited onscreen, but Darth Lucas seems to be taking responsibility on the talk-show circuit. Whoever's really responsible, it's a marathon of PlayStation dogfights and hokey line readings. And it's a shame. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Shame ★★★★ Director Steve McQueen (no, not that one) follows up Hunger, his despairing Bobby Sands biopic, with an unsettling depiction of sex addiction in Manhattan. Michael Fassbender delivers the year's most fearless performance as Brandon, a successful yuppie who buries himself in an oblivion of empty hookups, seedy clubs, prostitutes and porn. When Brandon's train-wreck of a sister (Carey Mulligan) arrives needing a place to crash, their frayed family dynamic ruptures Brandon's self-imposed isolation. Short on dialogue and shot in minutes-long takes that leave the performers nowhere to hide, Shame is an exposed nerve. McQueen's vision of New York City is steely and unforgiving, all reflective surfaces and anonymity. Mulligan, too often confined to playing a kitten, is a revelation here, aching with carnal need. Look past all the sex and this is a horror movie about the loneliness and alienation imposed by modern life. (At Kendall Square and the Waltham Embassy.)

Sherlock Holmes: A Game of Shadows ★ ½ I worry that Robert Downey Jr. is turning into Johnny Depp. Guy Ritchie's 2009's Sherlock Holmes will never be mistaken for a great movie, but it was clever, light on its feet and at least offered the winning spectacle of Downey and Jude Law bickering like a couple of old queens. The dude-ish, bare-knuckle-brawling Holmes upset most dedicated followers of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's original stories, but I could roll with the reinterpretation. Not so with this sorry sequel, which lands in theaters like a lump of Christmas coal. It's bigger and louder, and so much less involving. Holmes can't even be bothered to solve much in this non-mystery, as he and Watson spend most of their time running from explosions that drown out their bitchy banter. Eventually Jared Harris turns up as a sorely outmatched Professor Moriarty. Yawn. There's a deadness to Downey's delivery, hitting overfamiliar beats as if he's walking through a theme park instead of a movie. He might as well be playing Captain Jack Sparrow. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Tinker Tailor Soldier Spy ★★ Let the Right One In director Tomas Alfredson's stagnant adaptation of John le Carré's spy novel revels in the source material's status as the anti-Bond thriller. Set in a 1973 rife with bad sideburns and unflattering eyeglasses, it's espionage full of ugly men toting manila folders and making insinuations in rooms so smoky that even the movie theater winds up with nicotine stains on its walls. Something very bad happened in Budapest, and Gary Oldman's George Smiley is eventually coaxed from retirement to ferret out a mole within the British secret service. Chockablock with great English character actors aching for a paycheck now that the Harry Potter series is over, Tinker Tailor fusses with a fractured time line, obscuring crucial information and priding itself on keeping the audience as far away from the plot as possible. This is an expertly mounted, enervating slog. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

War Horse ★★★ The schmaltziest movie of the year, War Horse is just Steven Spielberg doing what Steven Spielberg does. Even if that ain't your thing, there's still no denying that he's the most gifted craftsman of his generation. Based on Michael Morpurgo's 1982 children's book—recently adapted into a smash Broadway play by Nick Stafford—it arrives etched in the simple, bold strokes of a passed-down fable. Newcomer Jeremy Irvine (a lantern-jawed hunk who looks like Christopher Reeve perpetually on the verge of tears) trains the title mount, a magnificent creature we follow through a long procession of various owners and occasionally harrowing vignettes. Folks in impossibly ugly situations rise to the occasion by reaching out to one another with simple acts of kindness, more often than not inspired by this strangely magnetic horse. Of course, it's corny. This is a Disney movie directed by Steven Spielberg. Resistance is futile. (In the suburbs.)

Unleash the Keys

Piano Forte A sense of humor, a big vocabulary and can't-get-it-out-of-your-head songwriting skills makes Tufts grad Stephie Coplan a piano-playing tour de force. Flanked by Pedestrians bassist John Hebert and drummer Shane Considine, her punchy lyrics take flight. With a sound that blends dance-punk, ska and Taylor Swift–like pop melodies, Coplan returns to Boston for the release of the band's debut album. Tackling everything from relationship stings to life in suburbia, the band exudes a life's-a bitch-but-at-least-there's-sex sensibility. Their first single, "Jerk," is climbing indie charts nationwide with its quirky insights and playful rock 'n' roll backbone. Hear that track and more at Lizard Lounge on Feb. 18. Kiley Jacques

Under the Gun

Taking Aim

Local artist Linda Burke hits the mark with her latest solo show, Points of Impact. Burke uses charcoal, pastel, marker and other materials to render portraits and diagrams that explore the dichotomy between beauty and violence. Her pigment-rich media rest atop human targets marred by ragged bullet holes. Heavy in symbolism, Burke's show is on view at the Spoke Gallery through March.

RESTAURANTS

BISTRO DU MIDI [272 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-426-7878, www.bistrodumidi.com.] Bistro du Midi showcases authentic Provencal cuisine in a warm, welcoming, and beautiful setting. Inspired by the ingredients and culinary techniques of the Midi region in France, Executive Chef, Robert Sisca presents modern, ingredient-driven creations that are at once refined and approachable. From a carefully conceived charcuterie selection to the freshest seafood, meats and vegetables, Bistro du Midi brings the simple, clean and bold flavors of Provence to Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

L'ANDANA [86 Cambridge Street, Burlington, 781-270-0100, www.landanagrill.com] L'Andana will transport you to the foothills of Tuscany. The restaurant spins the rustic look of an old world farmhouse into a modern interpretation of the faraway countryside. Chef Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Marvin Posada work together to create cuisine that is equally fresh, authentic and contemporary Italian as well as featuring a selection of items from a wood grill. Full bar, extensive wine list, complimentary valet parking, and a striking private dining room are welcome amenities. Dinner Sunday-Saturday.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, www.mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SORELLINA [One Huntington Avenue, Boston, 617-412-4600, www.sorellinaboston.com] Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Steven Morlino prepare contemporary regional Italian/Mediterranean food in this sophisticated setting in Copley Square. Matching the creative cuisine is a warm-modern design highlighted by a glowing mural and expansive floor-to-ceiling windows. Settle into soft leather upholstery and enjoy the finely-crafted room that's welcoming, comfortable and elegant. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

THE CONSTANT GARDNER

Act Two

Boston has something new to brag about, and it's a doozy.

The new wing of the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum was unveiled with a series of black-tie blowouts, the first of which was a Special Opening Preview that would have done Mrs. Jack proud.

Deemed important enough for The New York Times to cover, the evening had everyone oohing and aahing, in addition to air-kissing, kibitzing and sipping Champagne.

Guests entered the breathtaking new addition to be greeted by the likes of stunning brunette director Anne Hawley, the project's quarterback, Barbara Hostetter, her cable gazillionaire husband, Amos, rightfully lionized architect Renzo Piano, eminence grise Jack Gardner, performance artist Lee Mingwei, and a pair of Italian canaries, who were all gathered in the "living room."

> The evening had everyone oohing and ahhing, in addition to air-kissing.

This might've been a tactical error, as guests were supposed to continue into the courtyard for drinks, but everyone was understandably reluctant to leave. Alcohol being an excellent motivator, though, most of us did make it to the older part of the museum and up to the beautifully restored Tapestry Room. Even lovelier were the people we bumped into along the way.

These included latter-day Nick and Nora Charles John and Trevania Henderson, statuesque blonde iconoclast Alli Achtmeyer and the always-affable Bill, yummy mummies Nina Fialkow and Stephanie Harvey, a Russian supermodel who insisted her name was Katherine Chapman, NBA royalty Wyc and Corinne Grousbeck, Beacon Hill doyenne Biddy Owens and her boyish other half, Bob, John Singer Sargent painting come-to-life RoAnn Costin, and so on and so forth.

A Bacchanalian buffet was held in the new wing, and all sorts of interesting things went on all over the place, until it was time to check out Calderwood Hall.

Tim and Lisa Donovan at the TV Diner Gala

A perfect cube and a perfect gem of a concert hall, it hosted performances by a lineup of world-class talent, culminating in an appearance by Kiwi stunner Dame Kiri Te Kanawa, whose singing moved several people to tears.

The evening's most repeated sentiment was just how much Mrs. Gardner would've loved the new addition, with some added speculation as to how long it'll be before her footsteps will be heard in the middle of the night.

The award for best impression of a Jewish mother went to the woman who greeted a friend by saying, "I have to find out you're dating someone from reading the newspaper?"

And the evening's wittiest exchange:

"Is she sane?"

"Well, no, not offensively so."

Priorities

Food events to raise money for charity are as common as belches, but one that stands above most is the TV Diner Gala, held at the Seaport World Trade Center.

A fund-raiser for Horizons for Homeless Children, you could feast on foie gras or pig out on pizza, catch a bourbon buzz or get fizzy from Champagne. Even better, you could mix and mingle with the likes of cohosts Billy Costa and Jenny Johnson, Kiss 108 morning mouth Matt Siegel, the occupationally gay Jim Clerkin and his adorable other half, Mikey Weinle, dangerous duo Stephanie and Greg Loeber (fresh from the slopes of Chamonix), red hot mama Rosie Howells, south-of-the-border venturers Diane and David Patryon, man of leisure William George with the bodacious Luba Gorelik, unfairly cute couple Tim and Lisa Donovan, bewitching Weston dweller Sandra Manning Gosselin, and one man who asked his wife, "Is it gauche if I put ketchup and mustard on this?"

However, the evening's choicest remark came from the guest who said, "I can't remember your name, but I never forget a mink." ×××

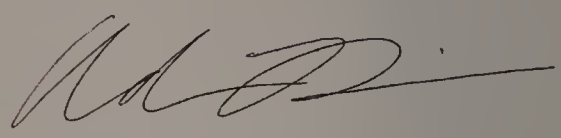
The IMPROPER

Pleated Khakis = Disgrace



There was a lot of flummery last year when GQ anointed Boston the worst-dressed city in the country. Well, fine. Instead of protesting that not all of us wear Red Sox caps to weddings, better to embrace the shame, like giving Nick Altschuller a hug. But it raises the question, what does it mean to dress well?

Adam DeTour

If fashion were a solid, breathing entity, it would be a gorgon with the sunglasses of Karl Lagerfeld, the midriff of Adriana Lima and the personality of John Galliano. It would live on a diet of Adderall, cigarettes and its own young. On most evenings, you'd find it hanging around expensive restaurant bars yawping into its phone about the rising cost of sweatshop labor before it locked itself in the ladies' room to vomit chunks of Anna Wintour's soul. Then it would primly fix its lipstick and stride back into the bar to bite the head off an intern.

Slay the beast, you cry. Then we can return to a simpler world in which a tucked polo doesn't earn you an arched eyebrow from your coworker with a Details subscription. But that would be missing the point. Fashion will be relevant so long as people believe that a new pair of pants can make them distinct from the seven billion other shoppers on the planet. Better to ride the beast, even tame it. Treat fashion with respect and it will let you scratch its Ed Hardy–clad underbelly. Hence this handy spring fashion issue.

BREW CREW

LIKE MANY COLLEGE STUDENTS, Rob Burns, Michael Oxton and Mike O'Mara acquired a taste for beer. And, like many, they toyed with the idea of opening a brewery. Where their story diverges from the norm is that they actually pursued that goal. For five years, the trio would arrive home from their day jobs to spend their nights brewing, often until 3 am. "We were brewing like mad men," says Oxton, 27. "We ended up with way too much beer in the house, and we thought, 'How do we get rid of this?'" They started throwing successful tasting parties, and finally decided to open their own "nanobrewery," Night Shift Brewing, in Everett. Their initial lineup, including Taza stout, with chicory root, ginger and Taza cocoa nibs, debuts this month. Says Oxton, "We're not trying to recreate what's out there but innovate new beers and styles." NICK ALTSCHULLER

This isn't the placatory vegetarian option. It's the taco you want most. Even the staffers agree that the avocado and queso filling is the standout at Lone Star Taco Bar, Allston's new hip(ster) tequila and taco stop from the folks behind Deep Ellum. Both ingredients see time in the fire, with the cheese taking on a sear as deeply browned as steak, while the chunks of creamy avocado pick up a touch of smoke. Salsa verde and corn relish add juiciness and a tangy jolt. Opt for a double wrapping of handmade corn tortillas to fortify your taco, and your journey through the rest of the menu. ELIZABETH BOMZE

KITCHEN SHRINK

A little hierarchy goes a long way.

TO WRITE IN THE WEEDS: The Psychology of Chefs and Restaurants, James Beard–winning Cambridge psychologist Scott Haas spent a year and a half chasing Craigie on Main's Tony Maws and other Boston- and New York–based restaurateurs. "It was a real eye-opener for me," he says. "You rarely meet people this passionate and intense."

The book, which will be published next spring, dives into the dynamics of the kitchen hierarchy—one he compares to the system he sees while treating patients enlisted in the Coast Guard. Both guards and kitchen staff are in uniform, follow orders from people who demand respect and work in a regimented daily routine. "How you feel doesn't matter," Haas says. "If you don't know who you are, the restaurant [provides] a real sense of identity."

AFTER OPENING FOR breakfast and lunch a few months ago in Newtonville, the Rox Diner's second location is now serving dinner. Co-owner Johnny Fortin says the current best seller is avocado crème fraîche–topped salmon, but the apricot-glazed pork chop and steak frites are hot on its heels. So should we expect a third diner to pop up soon? "It's a lot of fun," Fortin says, "But it takes a lot of stars to align." We'll take that as a maybe.

PASTRY CHEF JOANNE CHANG is having a fantastic year. While she's hard at work on Flour Power, the follow-up to her acclaimed debut cookbook, she's also a semifinalist for a James Beard Award, and Harvard has invited her to teach one of its Science and Cooking classes come fall. Congratulations, chef.

SCENE CHANGE The revamped bar at Clio

REMAKING HISTORY

If restaurants obey Darwinian law, then chef Ken Oringer's Clio/Uni amalgamate has evolved to become an even stronger force on our dining landscape. For 15 years, Clio has been one of the city's top destinations for special occasions, but times, and Oringer, have changed. "My food has evolved, it's cleaner and more minimalist now," he says. "I wanted the restaurant to reflect that. It's still elegant, but it's less formal. People don't want to celebrate with a jacket and tie anymore."

The renovations give a new platform for cocktail chemist Todd Maul. Says Oringer, "If there's one thing I love more than food, it's cocktails, and if you have Michael Jordan on offense, you play him." Maul's followers will find relief from the crowds in the spacious new lounge area, complete with an extended bar and added booth seating. His molecularly twisted menu of rotovaped vodka Aviations and smoked ice cubes is designed to pair with Oringer's updated list of bar bites, like bone marrow topped with pickled ramps, kumquats and capers or duck drummettes with XO sauce.

Another goal was to establish a unique identity for Uni. "It felt like it was stuck between Clio and the hotel lobby," Oringer says. "What I really wanted was for it be a true Japanese izakaya." The small lounge has been consistently busy since it colonized the space 10 years ago, but a revamped entryway bar now makes it clear that you're entering a fully separate experience. Sushi's still the draw, but Oringer and chef Chris Gould have started dishing up Asian streetfood like pork-belly steam buns and kimchee-topped fried chicken.

"MY FOOD HAS EVOLVED."

The most popular addition, however, is the steaming bowls of ramen available after 11 pm, Thursdays through Saturdays. Ramen is currently having a moment in Boston with Guchi's and Myers + Chang also attempting to bowl people over, and the two versions on Uni's menu attracted some 70 hopefuls who lined up outside on the first weekend it was offered.

Lest Oringer fans fear his flagship has changed course, the tweaks are, in the end, mostly cosmetic. "After all the changes we've made, I feel like this is still the same restaurant," says Oringer. "It just got a boob job and some liposuction."

KYLE WRIGHT

Olympic figuring skating champion Kristi Yamaguchi is the author of the children's book, It's a Big World, Little Pig!. She'll sign copies at Barnes & Noble Prudential Center on March 8 and Wellesley Books on March 9.

How are you like Poppy the Pig?
Mostly in her determination in not giving up, in being nervous and feeling vulnerable in certain situations.

Why a pig?
I've always been a pig person. My house is filled with pigs I've collected over the years or have been given to me. [I was born in the] Year of the Pig, so there's a big connection to me and pigs. And being a pig presents its own set of challenges when you want to skate.

Has this impacted your consumption of pork products?
I've always eaten pork or bacon or whatever. I have friends who love pigs and won't eat pork. I'm fine with it. I am sensitive though. We kept saying "Maybe Poppy should go to Hawaii," and I don't know if she should be going to any luaus.

Your motto is "Always dream." Have all of your dreams come true?
I'll keep dreaming. There's always something else out there, and I think it keeps me young to always have a challenge. My priority right now is being a mom, and with the kids being as young as they are, I'm trying to be involved with their school as much as possible while I have some influence.

What's the most important lesson you've tried to teach them?
Treat others how you want to be treated. It's a cliché, but I want them to be happy in life, and I think it's much easier to be pleasant than, well, unpleasant. KYLE WRIGHT

Essential Oils

With all the recent press about the false virginity of many supermarket olive oils, the products the Hatziiliades family imports seem even more precious. The Watertown-based business' "Early Harvest" Greek olive oil—and, if you're lucky enough to snag a bottle, its first-press-of-the-season "Olio Nuovo"—is grass-green and glossy with a peppery, throat-tickling bite. It's best appreciated simply in a vinaigrette, drizzled over a scoop of ricotta, or mopped up with a hunk of crusty bread.

Drink of the Moment

(BAR)TENDER IS THE NIGHT

NAME: The Red Dress.

PRICE: $11.

DUAL-USE FASHION LINGO: Velvety, crisp, cerise, sans embellishment.

THE WHO: William "English Bill" Codman, formerly of Woodward, L'Espalier, Gaslight and other establishments.

THE WHAT: Raspberry gastrique (raspberry puree, sugar and balsamic vinegar), Champagne.

THE WHERE: You won't find it at the nightclub. The Red Dress is only on the menu at Storyville's dining-focused "bordello room."

TASTING NOTES: The vinegar combines with raspberry to create a tart, fruit-forward and ultra-dry cocktail.

GENDER STUDIES: Rose-hued and bubbly, the Red Dress is a hit with the venue's female customers.

MIXING IT UP: Though it's one of the few cocktails on the menu not derived from a classic, Codman's handcrafted gastrique keeps it consistent with Storyville's jazzy New Orleans vibe.

BONO MIGHT CALL IT: Inspi(RED), (RED)onkulous, What he's looking for.

Haute Cocoa

A LATE-WINTER TREATMENT PUTS THE CURE IN PEDICURE.

If the studies are correct, chocolate is even more of a stress-reliever than was once thought. Research has now found that eating about an ounce and a half of dark chocolate every day for two weeks reduces stress hormones, which is, of course, a perfect excuse to indulge. In the case of the Boston Harbor Hotel's HOT CHOCOLATE PEDICURE, the indulgence comes with an incredible foot massage.

The session kicks off with a hot footbath, made effervescent courtesy of a chocolate bomb (which turns the pedi-tub into a richly beige-hued, bubbling soak reminiscent of Yoo-Hoo). This is followed by that superb foot massage (credit the technicians' firm attention to pressure points), and a toe-nail polishing so meticulous, the results look like they they were done under an atomic microscope. Then, just when you think your stress couldn't be more melted away, you're presented with a steaming pitcher of hot cocoa. It goes down as luxuriantly as the rest of the cosseting treatment. So, even if the studies prove wrong, you walk away perfectly relaxed, inside and out. ALEXANDRA HALL

Impersonals PLAYING FARE

TO BOSTON'S "WORLD-CLASS" CAB DRIVERS: Last weekend my 83-year-old mom arrived at South Station for a weekend visit. We wanted to get lunch near the ICA, but when we tried to get a cab at the stand outside, multiple drivers refused to take us, saying they'd never heard of the ICA and didn't want directions. The problem? It's only eight blocks, so they didn't want to get back in line. It's a huge F-you to my mom, who they expected to walk all that way. Not only is what they did illegal, it was bulls. Here's a special "You Suck!" to cabbie No. 3, who was fluent in English one minute and incomprehensible the next. Hate and run

To the bratty girl who chided me from her window: I'm not exactly sure how quietly taking my dog for his morning walk disturbed your beauty rest, but your delivery was flawed, and would've been more effective if you hadn't gone straight for nasty. You live in a densely populated city. Get over it. At least the noise you're hearing is happy and not someone with a vendetta standing beneath your window banging together pots and pans. Why don't you take a crack at tolerance?

There before you and long after you're gone

To the businessman on the 11A US Airways Boston shuttle: Just because I refused to watch your bags while you went to get a snack, moments before boarding, doesn't make me a horrible person. I heard you mutter, in obvious frustration, "What has this world come to?" You can call me paranoid all you want, buddy, but I prefer to think of myself as cautious and safe. Next time, pack lighter so you can carry your bags, like the rest of us, to buy your Doritos and soda. Now boarding

UPS AND DOWNS

One family's pursuit of the American dream

RICHIE PALUMBO, DRIVING around Boston's leafy suburbia, falls in love with a house outside his social standing. But he finagles his way into buying it, bringing upward mobility to his children, Jack and Joannie. The family's evolving story, though, proves that zip codes can mean zip.

Jack, an insecure charmer, fails to apply to college and sinks into downward mobility in spite of a teacher's ominous warnings. His heart yearns from afar for the elusive Christina as he flits around various relationships. Jack's unrootedness makes him the object of scorn: one roommate/lawyer contemptuously calls him "Caulfield"; a girlfriend's father mocks him for studying poetry with no academic agenda. He eventually marries Christina, but, after three children, she leaves him.

Norumbega Park
by Anthony Giardina

The novel takes place in Boston's suburbs.

Giardina's portrayal of Jack's stumblings and apprehensions makes him more sympathetic than if he'd found his way. Joannie, by contrast, flees the dangerous outside world and enters a nunnery. Over time, she edges her way out and into a relationship, then marriage with a man appropriately named Angel. Spiritual yearnings and the twists and turns of sexuality abound in this book. ✖✖✖

FROM PAGE 45: "He lay his head against her smallish, warm breasts. She stroked the hair that fell against his neck. He pretended for a moment that she was someone else. Like he would look up and this other girl would smile and make some joke and he could believe that life was a sailboat and all you had to do was keep the sails open and receive the wind as you skidded across a lake, where tiny ripples surfaced."

HAPPY HOURS

Mixing it up in New Orleans

DRINK IT ALL IN "New" New Orleans dining at Cochon and Upperline

AS HIGHBROW BARS sprout around town, the influence of New Orleans' cocktail culture on Boston is increasingly obvious. At Somerville's Backbar, staffers shake and stir frothy Ramos gin fizzes. The popular Sazerac gets special attention on English Bill Codman's menu at 'Nawlins-themed Storyville. And moonshine, largely a mystery north of the Mason-Dixon, has landed a starring role at Sweet Cheeks. But in the Big Easy itself, cocktail lovers can find themselves at odds with tourists whose tastes trend toward T&A and takeaway cups. Informed drinking requires a little effort.

The International House, one of the few true boutique hotels in town, is comfortably situated on the edge of the French Quarter and the Central Business District—providing a much-needed break from the mayhem of Bourbon Street. The dimly lit lobby is refined but sexy, with towering 23-foot ceilings and plush pops of red. It also has Loa, the hotel's bar, where hipster bartenders double as botanists. Most drinks showcase herbs picked from rows of planters that line the bar, where the air is permanently perfumed with the scent of rosemary and lemon rind.

A few blocks away, the luxurious Sazerac Bar at the Roosevelt hotel popularized its namesake cocktail in the mid-1800s. It's unfortunate that the version they serve up today, in a branded glass, relies too heavily on Herbsaint and has the mouthfeel of an atomic bomb. Their Ramos gin fizz, another cocktail they trademarked, this time in the 1930s, evokes a much more pleasant reaction.

For a more mouthwatering Sazerac, head down Baronne Street to Bar UnCommon at the Renaissance Pere Marquette Hotel. The modern interior boasts a corporate cocktail list, but mixologist Laura McMillian is quick to offer suggestions, like a fruit-filled Pimm's Cup. With her husband, Chris, she's a member of American cocktail royalty, managing the Museum of the American Cocktail a few blocks away and rubbing elbows with famous barkeeps in every city, including Boston's own Misty Kalkofen. Her Sazerac uses an absinthe wash for a smoother, warming sip that indicates why the libation became an integral thread in the city's eclectic tapestry. She'll also whip up a French 75—with gin—before sending you to Arnaud's French 75 on Bienville, where, in an ongoing rivalry that yields delicious results, bartender Chris Hannah makes a version with Cognac.

Should you need ballast for all the liquor, the old standbys of Bourbon House and Brennan's offer reliable and well-executed local fare in the Quarter. For a twist, try Cochon, chef Donald Link's widely-hyped Cajun spot. A bright and boisterous beacon in the quiet, gloomy Warehouse District, Cochon represents the "new" New Orleans, where fine dining remains casual and fried balls of boudin pair perfectly with tasting flights of Midnight Moon moonshine.

Across town, locals go to JoAnn Clevenger's Upperline for its inviting, down-home warmth accented by the restaurateur's collection of New Orleans art. Dishes like fried green tomatoes and shrimp remoulade appear on many menus in town, but never to this standard. It's off the beaten path, but worth the cab fare.

New Orleans is unquestionably a party destination, but a trip to Bourbon Street doesn't have to mean a seedy strip club where $16 Bud Lights and secondhand smoke do little more than fog the memory. This is the cocktail capital of the United States, after all. Skip the Hand Grenades. ✖✖✖

It's the sides that shine at Tiffani Faison's BBQ joint.

★★★½☆

Sweet Cheeks
1381 Boylston St., Boston
(617-266-1300)

FAT OF THE LAND Farm salad, one of the best dishes on the menu, offsets the richness of biscuits and ribs.

WHEN ROCCA ABRUPTLY shuttered its doors last year, chef Tiffani Faison's winning streak seemed to end just as she was building momentum. After a memorable turn on Top Chef and a stint at O Ya, Faison's brief helm at Rocca drew accolades and acolytes to her intensely flavorful Italian dishes. Rebounding from the closure, it's not surprising that Faison's follow-up, Sweet Cheeks, turns to the Southern comfort food of her childhood. Simplicity has its charms: Pork ribs ($19, half slab) smoked so long that even the bones are soft, sweet tea served in mason jars, white bread for mopping up plates, fried food galore. At times, however, erring on the side of the simple can be a shortcoming.

Take the sauces, for example. Instead of slathering its ribs during the cooking process, Sweet Cheeks equips each table with three high-acid condiments: a tomato-based BBQ, a vinegary North Carolina and a hot pepper option. I'm a fan of Kansas City–style, sweet-sauce-smothered barbecue, so I found the sauces especially astringent. The sweetest of the trio was the tomato-based BBQ, but it had an unpleasant, chemical smoke taste that lingered long after my meal. The habanero was quite watery and wasn't aggressively spicy; and the North Carolina sauce was essentially rebottled vinegar.

The thinking is that because Sweet Cheeks uses only premium cuts of Berkshire pork and Pineland Farms beef, a simple Texas-style dry rub with minimal saucing will allow the meats to shine. Yet while everything is succulent—due to lengthy smoking over white oak—the underwhelming dry rubs result in highly priced barbeque that tastes somewhat bland. Of the meats ($24, for two; $26, for three), the pulled pork was the most flavorful, especially when ordered as a sandwich ($12) and mounded with pickles over hot griddled Texas toast.

Ironically, what stands out at Sweet Cheeks isn't the meats, but the sides. The bucket of biscuits ($10) brings four softball-sized fluffy servings. Spread with the accompanying honey butter, they're a meal in themselves. The sides' playfulness compensated for the simplicity of the mains. Don't miss the farm salad ($6, small; $9, large), made of roasted Brussels sprouts, baby arugula, hazelnuts and red grapes, the greens so fresh and vibrant they tasted as if they'd been picked that morning. Of the hot sides, Cita's broccoli cheese casserole with its Ritz-cracker crust evokes down-home heartiness, as do heirloom BBQ beans, thickened with molasses and bits of pulled pork ($7, small; $12, large). Also impressive was the butterscotch pudding ($6), a small jar of yellow, caramelized heaven with the consistency of flan.

Another highlight was the bar offerings. All-American "lawnmower beers" like Miller High Life ($5) share space with more eclectic microbrews like Otter Creek porter ($6) and Left Hand milk stout ($7). The hooch is equally well thought out, while heavy on the whiskies. The House Bill 819 ($10), made with tea-infused Berkshire mountain corn whiskey, can lift your spirits during your inevitable wait for a table.

The restaurant doesn't take reservations for parties smaller than eight, so you're bound to be cooling your heels for more than an hour on most nights. The brightly lit, cherry-wood-furnished space is packed to the gills with people hoping for a glimpse of the chef or a taste of what she's up to now. They're drawn to the idea of Southern hospitality writ large in the heavy meats and starches, but might leave disappointed at the sizable prices. Sweet Cheeks left me nostalgic for the nuanced, transformative cuisine at which Faison excels. ✖✖✖

Q: I AM SICK OF WAXING AND AM CONSIDERING LASER HAIR REMOVAL FOR MY LEGS, AND MY HUSBAND IS THINKING ABOUT IT FOR HIS HAIRY BACK. WHAT IS INVOLVED, IS IT A ONE-SHOT DEAL?

A: LASER HAIR REMOVAL WORKS BY using light energy to permanently disable the hair follicle. The laser light selectively targets hair follicles while leaving other tissue untouched.

Since hair grows in cycles, several treatments are required. Any hairs that are in the active growth phase and will be disabled by the laser. The remaining dormant hairs should to be treated at a later date, usually in 4 to 6 weeks.

The number of sessions will vary for each individual, but 3 to 6 treatments are usually required; sometimes more. It depends on the area being treated as well as your hair's density, thickness, and growth cycle.

All areas of the body can be treated. The most popular areas for women are the underarms, bikini area, and legs. For men, the back, chest and shoulders.

Most people who have laser hair removal are incredibly happy with the results, but as with other laser procedures, make certain to select an experienced healthcare professional for optimal results.

RED FLAGS

Tilda Swinton shines in Lynne Ramsay's grueling portrait of a murderer's mother.

We Need to Talk About Kevin
Starring Tilda Swinton, John C. Reilly and Ezra Miller. Based on the novel by Lionel Shriver. Screenplay by Lynne Ramsay and Rory Stewart Kinnear. Directed by Lynne Ramsay. At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.

AT LONG LAST, THE MOST divisive movie of 2011 lands locally. Recalling the parental fearfulness of Eraserhead, director Lynne Ramsay's We Need to Talk About Kevin is an outrageous provocation. Brutal, hilarious and incredibly sad, you're either going to love it or despise it. Either way, here's a movie worth arguing about.

Tilda Swinton, that art-house icon with the sharp angles and Ziggy Stardust aura, stars as Eva, first glimpsed writhing in psychedelic rapture at the Spanish Tomatina festival. But these simpler times are juxtaposed with harsh cuts to a drab suburbia many years later, where her home is vandalized with blood-red paint. Now alone and reviled by her neighbors, Eva can't even go to the supermarket. Something very bad has happened, but it's going to take us a little while to find out exactly what.

Constantly drifting between the awful present and unreliable memories, We Need to Talk About Kevin teases out the details. Once upon a time, Eva was a jet-setting bohemian writer. But then a tryst with schlubby Franklin (John C. Reilly) turned into an accidental pregnancy. Their apartment in New York City gave way to an unnamed cookie-cutter suburb, and Eva's wandering dreams were consigned to a shrine of abandoned world maps on her office wall.

This isn't the way we're supposed to talk about motherhood in the movies, and I think the reason this picture rubs many the wrong way has a lot to do with Swinton's fearless depiction of Eva's guilt-ridden selfishness. This is a life a lot of people would kill for, but it's not one she ever wanted.

Her son, Kevin, is a manifestation of those conflicted emotions. He's also a raging psychopath. Played at various ages by Rock Duer, Jasper Newell and Ezra Miller, the kid looks like a funhouse mirror image of Swinton's distinctive features. Even as a toddler he has an alarming stare. Heck, as an infant he cries so loud and for so long his mom parks his stroller next to a jackhammer to briefly drown out the screaming.

Kevin is such a bad seed it's easy to mistake certain moments of this picture for an art-house gloss on The Omen.

Kevin is constantly outwitting and one-upping his mother in a collection of vignettes that Ramsay somehow manages to play for queasy laughs while still giving full consideration to Eva's overwhelming sadness and exasperation. The simple act of changing his diaper turns into psychological warfare, as the toddler possesses such sinister bowel control that he defiantly soils himself with a smirk, just when she's finally finished cleaning him.

A lot of folks strenuously object to scenes like that, or the one in which the kid rudely interrupts his mother's lesson about the birds and the bees with a much blunter synopsis. Kevin is such a bad seed it's easy to mistake certain moments of this picture for an art-house gloss on The Omen. But it's also important to remember that we're watching Eva's flashbacks. She's post-traumatic as hell, and such memories should hardly be interpreted as fact. I see them as nightmare projections based on her monstrous regret, not to mention everything that has happened.

Ramsay's slippery structure lets us know sooner than later that Kevin was in fact a very naughty boy, heading into his high school one morning with some bike locks and a bow and arrow. The extent of the massacre dribbles out elliptically, lingering mostly on the aftermath, years later. A pariah stranded in a town where she never wanted to live, Eva keeps fanatically scrubbing those splashes of paint from her house and her car, and all this red stuff off her hands.

Lynne Ramsay hasn't directed a movie since 2002's Morvern Callar, and that's certainly our loss. She composes images in fragmented waves, as stray bits of scenes accumulate over time. Seamus McGarvey's gorgeous cinematography amplifies the sterility of the suburban landscape, punctuated by blindingly bright reds. Everything from tomato soup cans, to clock radios, to jelly sandwiches act as harbingers of doom. This is bravura filmmaking.

Considering the annoying way our culture currently fetishizes parenthood, with celebrity baby-bumps treated as the second coming in the media, Ramsay's work feels transgressive. We're not supposed to talk about a lot of the ugly feelings Kevin stirs up, but maybe we should. ×××

Music { PAUL ROBICHEAU }

LIVE THROUGH THIS

Noise-folk upstart EMA filters hope from the ashes of her youth.

EMA
plays at Brighton Music Hall on March 15.

STAY IN SPOOL EMA's dark soundscapes take Inspiration from Courtney Love, the Velvet Underground and Bikini Kill.

EMA'S GRIM, ATMOSPHERIC 2011 standout Past Life Martyred Saints echoes the pain and confusion of a teenage outcast. So it's no surprise that Erika M. Anderson experienced that dark side firsthand.

Yet Anderson shares joyful resolve in the video to EMA's new digital single "Take One Two," which benefits the anti-bullying Jamie Isaacs Foundation. "Never let them hurt you," she sings, while the video shows a 1996 home recording of a young Anderson and her friends dressing up and acting out in a South Dakota trailer park. They were ignoring an outside world where they would, she says, "get our asses kicked for being queer or punk or just plain weird."

"I didn't want to show people who were victims of bullying," says Anderson, now 30. "We didn't have Facebook, where people would make fake profiles of people or 'I hate so-and-so' pages or online threats. There was a lot of bulls, but once we could go into our own little world, we had a great time."

Unlike that video's "unfaked happiness," Past Life Martyred Saints sounds like the antithesis of a healthy adolescence. "Butterfly Knife" characterizes a self-mutilating goth, and "Marked" finds Anderson describing arms of "see-through plastic" and singing "These drugs they are making me so sad" in a fragile voice.

> "People are always surprised that I'm coherent and laughing."

"People are always kind of surprised that I'm coherent and laughing," she says. "In some ways, being able to put stuff out in songs—like anything that's freaking me out or things that I've been through in the past—helps me to be a lot calmer."

Anderson won't reveal which songs reflect demons she's battled, those she's seen in others or those she's imagined, but she's surprised that "anyone can even be shocked or moved by anything anymore."

The most evocative track might be "California," an open rant in which the L.A. transplant spins thoughts of bleeding and bearing guns. "I'm just 22 and I don't mind dyin'," she sings, sounding desperate within the song's industrial pulse. Listeners may not even realize the line comes from Bo Diddley's "Who Do You Love?"

"People think my lyrics are over the top," the singer/guitarist says from her new home in Portland, Ore. "That lyric was in a benign rock song that people have been listening to for years!"

For her part, Anderson absorbed George Thorogood and the Destroyers' version of that classic along with more alternative riot-grrrl fare like Bikini Kill and Hole. She cites Courtney Love among her primary influences in addition to Lou Reed, whose Velvet Underground laid the sonic groundwork for EMA by "using strings and having long-form songs and weird production."

In turn, Anderson drew from her experience playing with experimental guitar outfit Amps for Christ, and then with the noise-folk band Gowns, whose members helped EMA record tracks for Past Life Martyred Saints. The music on the album refracts both grunge soundscapes and girl-group harmony, while lending a melodious complement to her lyrics.

"Grey Ship" mulls loneliness and mortality over ghostly lo-fi folk that slowly builds to clamorous waves. Fingers slide across guitar chords like nails on a chalkboard in "Marked." And "Red Star" turns a droning lullaby into a martial climax with the more hopeful line "I know nothing lasts forever. If you won't love me, someone will."

Although she tinkers with her arrangements, Anderson says lyrics come to her more spontaneously and subconsciously. "The more you don't think about what you want to say, it's a perfect truth," she says. "People really respond to stuff that's unguarded."

Yet, Anderson says she wrote the songs on Past Life Martyred Saints without thinking of an audience beyond herself. Now that the album has earned acclaim, she ponders her future course.

"You want to write to heal in some way or write to figure out how you feel about things or unburden yourself or tell someone's story in a graceful way," says Anderson, whose band plays at Brighton Music Hall on March 15. "We'll see how it's going to be." ✖✖✖

A dose of financial advice for getting into the market

BEFORE DIVULGING investment advice, a few words about the financial outlook: It's going to be a difficult economic climate, and the daily headlines will be mainly awful. The good news is that most of these headlines don't apply to anything you're doing, professionally or socially. Years ago, I had a client and friend, Peter Clark, who owned a consulting firm doing most of its business with the defense department. One day I called him and said, "Did you see such-and-such article in the Wall Street Journal?"

"I haven't read a newspaper in 15 years," he said.

"Come on," I answered. (This was before the Internet.) "How can you, in consulting, not read the Journal?"

Peter thought he was stating the obvious. "Fifteen years ago," he said, "I really knew all about two subjects. But every time I read about those two subjects in the newspapers, they always got it wrong. So I thought, if they get it wrong about what I know, what about what I don't know? And I stopped getting newspapers, saving myself about an hour and a half a day and endless aggravation."

So if I tell you, "Don't be a headline reader," it's because bad news may have nothing to do with your job or investments.

I believe there is a major lesson in these challenging economic times. This is the most Darwinian environment you and I have ever seen, no matter what your age. This is good news for the people who excel at what they do. So even though times are tough, there are—in this survival of the fittest atmosphere—both small companies and huge global brands that are doing fine to fantastic. But not all boats are going to rise.

John D. Spooner is an investment advisor, author and novelist. Contact him at thedance@improper.com.

General prosperity and "let the good times roll" are a long way down the line.

I advise a two-pronged approach to 2012. Ask yourself: What can I do personally? And what should I do with my money?

Personally, you might rework your résumé. When you do, make sure there's at least one thing that jumps out at the reader, something that separates you from the crowd. It could mean interests or hobbies. If you pursue bird watching, or raise pugs, or collect African art, or play in a rugby league, this is the stuff that'll really interest the interviewer, not academics or a bank internship. Often the interviewers will also have an interest in bird watching or rugby or pugs. They'll ask about this interest, and the interview process will run more smoothly. It's often the odd things you may not think matter that do. Interviewers tend to like people who share a similar past, or a similar passion.

As far as your money is concerned, for either savings (I know, "What savings?") or more likely your 401(k)s, I'd concentrate on where the greatest value lies. Perhaps the best place for money in the world is in great American global brand companies, the ones with fortress-like financial conditions that pay dividends higher than 10- to 30-year treasuries. We're coming off an 11-year-long decline in stock values, extending beyond the meltdown that started in the summer of 2007. It really began with the pricking of the Internet bubble in 2001–2002. So there aren't many people in Investorland who believe that exuberant markets, bull markets, greedy markets exist. That all seems so far away. But remember that cycles are inevitable in life. High anxiety and fear are sooner or later replaced by excitement and voracity. Not many people can see this coming, but it will. There will be a catalyst. I don't know whether it'll be a person or an event that will change people's perception from skepticism to "I have to be in the stock market." When I tell this to people, they tend to say one of two things, either "From your lips to God's ear," or "I won't live that long."

I believe you'll live that long, and if you're young and starting out in the world, you'll be rewarded if you own pieces of the great American brands. These can be in individual stocks or in Exchange Traded Funds (ETFs), or in specifically targeted mutual funds. As a really contrarian idea, you can begin accumulating some of the beaten-up European blue chips. Most of them are tarred with the brush of Europe's ills, but they have global reach. I think a little nibbling in this area will ultimately be rewarded.

But remember: Investing should be a marathon, not a sprint. Like life itself. ×××

LIGHTING UP

On the efficacy and dissatisfaction of electronic cigarettes

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

IT'S A FILTHY HABIT. Though it may feel cool, we all know the facts as we willfully suck the pollutants into our bodies. Long-term use is linked to hypertension, cardiovascular disease and cancer. Occasional use can become a crutch, which turns into addiction. Like many people, I ignore these facts and continue to drink. Then I sometimes want a cigarette.

I'm not a smoker by any stretch. My occasional lapses in judgment usually end with me waking up inflamed and regretful, gargling Listerine as I try to avoid my reflection in the mirror. I have an unabashed love for gadgets, though, and with the rise of electronic cigarettes, I was itching to give them a try. Plus, there was the notion that I could obliterate my occasional cravings by smoking myself sick, like a boy discovering his grandfather's Pall Malls.

Approximately 2.5 million Americans used electronic cigarettes last year. In a recent Italian study, after six months of e-cigarette use, more than half of the test subjects reported at least a 50 percent drop in their regular cigarette consumption. Free from the formaldehyde, tar and other carcinogens found in a pack of Camels, an e-cigarette instead contains a small reservoir of nicotine that's vaporized with each puff to create an inhalable mist.

While many medical organizations view e-cigarettes as a useful alternative to smoking, they're not fully stamped as safe. The Food and Drug Administration and the American Cancer Society have tried to block their sale. They're currently banned in Canada, the land of universal health care, but are also illegal in Denmark, home of sanctioned prostitution, and Mexico, where a Tijuana pharmacist will sell you horse tranquilizers without a prescription.

I received a couple of shipments through the mail. From Krave, purportedly the industry's most popular brand, came a disposable e-cigarette ($15) approximately equal to two packs of the real thing. Almost immediately, what began as a mischievous inquiry became a shameful embarrassment. "That could not get tackier," said one coworker as my inhalations lit the plastic rhinestone tip a bedazzling shade of blue. With the color scheme and the unwieldy weight, the sensation is more like sucking on a Maglite than a Marlboro. And though it was thrilling to legally smoke inside a bar, I was too humiliated to take more than a brief, secretive toke. It's a robotic facsimile of sin. Getting caught smoking a Krave would be like getting caught kissing your animatronic girlfriend.

> It's like getting caught kissing your animatronic girlfriend.

The situation improved with the arrival of the V2 Ultimate Kit ($160) stocked with a variety of models, chargers and cases. I shared the contents with a coworker who'd recently fallen back into the habit, and we both began to warm to the e-cigarette's potential. With the industry's "thickest stream," V2 does a better job mimicking the density of actual smoke, so it's easier to succumb to the fantasy of enjoying a real cigarette. Plus, discussing office politics with your feet on your desk and a cigarette in your hand drapes the workday in a Mad Men atmosphere, without the stink or the fear of ashing on the carpet. By the time we broke out the flavor packs, which ranged from cherry (noxious), to peppermint (oddly refreshing), to coffee (frustratingly tasty), I began to worry that I might be enjoying myself.

There are key negatives, though. First, e-cigarettes lack any sense of ceremony. There's no opening spark, smoldering middle or stamped out finale, just an endless, unsatisfying series of impotent draws. And while the routine is ruined, the physical reactions remain the same. The dry mouth, the itchy throat, the dilemma that bubbles up in the mind of "Why did I do that?" Of course, that can be spun as a positive. You're not supposed to want to smoke, and in fact, my coworker said he could see quitting if he had a supply of e-cigarettes at the ready, so I gave him all I had left.

But my self-destructive curiosity remained. During my trial, an e-cigarette exploded in a Florida man's face, turning his front teeth into shrapnel. I continued my experiment anyway. On my last night, like a sign from above, a friend told me he had cancer, and I still took a few furtive puffs. And the honest reason why is because e-cigarettes aren't poisonous enough. I was chasing a buzz that the knockoff couldn't deliver. But I tried anyway. As with any regrettable act, there's some element of gratification motivating you to commit it in the first place. Smoking is unsavory, but at least it's a relaxing tingling misdeed.

I know that cigarettes are stupid, so I didn't need the lesson. I needed an excuse. What I got was a faulty approximation best left to those looking to kick smoking and not to those who smoke for kicks. ×××

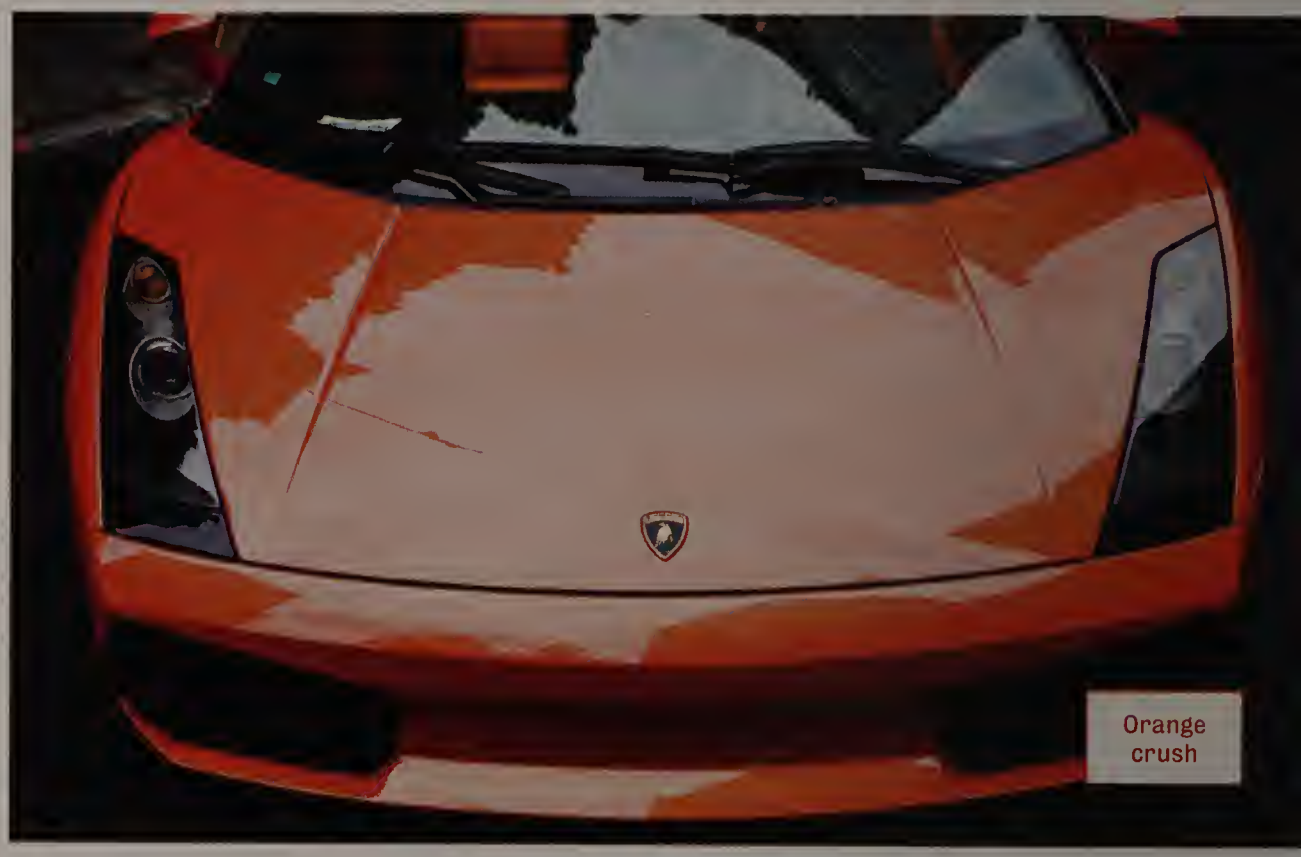
How my failed TV show became a smash



Read more at improper.com/blog

I'VE WRITTEN ONCE BEFORE about my involvement with The Car Show, the now-defunct program from the Speed network that ambitiously strove to provide America with automotive programming that didn't totally stink. But now that the show is done and certain insurance claims have been settled, it's time to tell a behind-the-scenes tale about how one episode went awry last summer in New York.

I had two responsibilities for this particular shoot. The first was to take the subway across Manhattan in a three-way race against host Matt Farah (riding a Vespa) and AC/DC front man Brian Johnson (driving a Lamborghini). The second was to beg Lamborghini for a car for Johnson to drive in the race. I accomplished both of these things, and even managed to avoid getting stabbed on the subway despite wearing dual "I Love New York" fanny packs and cutoff jean shorts that I had made that morning. The ineffably cool Johnson handily won the contest, we all had a beer and I congratulated myself on a job well done. All that remained was to get the Lambo back to the dealership without getting hit by a bus. That, it transpires, was the hard part.

Here's the situation: We're heading back to the dealership to return the car. A producer from the show is driving, and I'm in the passenger seat with my suitcase on my lap (small trunk, the Lambo). We're in the left lane of the West Side Highway when we stop at a red light. A school bus is to our left, in the turn lane. The bus driver gets the green arrow and does the ol' "fade right before turning left" maneuver. And, as I learned from driving an MBTA bus around the Charlestown Navy Yard, the tail end of a bus is subject to what's known in the industry as the Nicki Minaj effect, as the rear end swings wide in a turn. This happens regardless of whether or not there's a Lamborghini in the way.

In terms of awful noises, I'd say that a bus digging into the flank of a borrowed Lamborghini ranks right up there with an audiobook of the U.S. tax code narrated by Fran Drescher. By the time my brain processes what's happening, the bus has carved a scar all the way from the Lambo's rear fender to the front end. Great.

Orange crush

It takes more than bus-on-Lamborghini violence to interest a Manhattan cop.

Now we'll have to stop and file an accident report, exchange insurance information and... hold on, he's not stopping. He's driving away.

The world's shortest car chase ensues but we manage to get him to stop, at which point the bus driver profusely apologizes. I'm kidding, of course. This is New York, so when confronted by the maimed Lamborghini, he claims it was already like that and his bus had nothing to do with it. Yes, sir, you're onto my game—I drive around Manhattan in a wrecked Lamborghini hustling bus drivers. It's an elaborate scam, as you require a Lamborghini.

While the producer makes sure our deny-till-you-die bus driver doesn't flee, I search for a cop to file an accident report. I find an NYPD officer on the next block, but he claims that the accident scene—mind you, just a few hundred feet away—is out of his precinct, so I'll need to call someone else. I should've known that it takes more than bus-on-Lamborghini violence to pique the interest of a Manhattan cop. I know a New York cop, and on his first night on the job he had to go into a hotel room where a guy died while having sex with a gay prostitute. The corpse was on the bed, and other cops were already on the scene. As it was dinnertime, they'd ordered pizza. Don't mind the naked dead guy, and pass the pepperoni.

Eventually we get cops on the scene and file all the paperwork. Then it's time to tuck our tails in shame and return the mangled car to the dealership. When we arrive, the guy who collects the keys is amazingly nonchalant. "Russell Brand had a car last week, and you should've seen what it looked like when we got it back," he says. I guess I can count on Russell Brand to set the bar for debauchery so high that defiling a $200,000 automobile doesn't rate a raised eyebrow. "At least I'm not as bad as Russell Brand" is an esteem-booster that can apply to a lot of life situations, actually.

My morning began with the lead singer of AC/DC surrounded by a phalanx of TV cameras, one of which was in a helicopter. By lunch I'd crashed a Lamborghini. And on the way back to Boston, I crack open a beer while doing 127 mph through Connecticut. When you think about it, Amtrak is pretty rock star. ✖✖✖

ARE YOU READY TO COMMIT TO THE PAN-MASS CHALLENGE?

Through the Pan-Mass Challenge, ordinary people commit to achieving extraordinary physical and philanthropic goals. In August, 5,500 men, women and teens from 36 states and 8 countries will commit to riding up to 190 miles and raising $36 million for cancer research. Since 1980, the Pan-Mass Challenge has raised $338 million for Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. Somewhere along the PMC route lies a cure for cancer.

5 EARLY SOX STORY LINES

Will Bard Have a Fresh Start? The starters took most of the blame for last year's collapse, but let's not forget about Daniel Bard. Bard made 11 relief appearances in September and either blew a save or picked up a loss in five of them. This year, he looks for rebirth in the rotation, where at least he can't be any worse than John Lackey.

LAUNCHING POINT
Time for a new role for Bard

Is Big Papi Happy? David Ortiz didn't get the extension he was looking for this winter, but his $14.58 million paycheck is still fourth highest on the team. In fact, it's only slightly less than the combined salaries of Dustin Pedroia and Jacoby Ellsbury. Is that enough for Papi to finally feel wanted and respected? Dear God, I hope so.

Can Youkilis Hold Up? He'll be 33 on March 15, but Youk looked more like 73 down the stretch last season. It's obvious that age and the move back to third base has taken a toll on his body, but, this year more than ever, the Sox need the future Mr. Brady to stay healthy. The thought of Mike Aviles and Nick Punto in the same infield gives me that not so fresh feeling.

Was Chris Carpenter Worth the Wait? After four months of negotiations, the Sox and Cubs finally agreed on the compensation for Theo Epstein: some guy you've never heard of with the same name as a guy you already have! Ugh. A fitting end to a ridiculous and useless process.

Will Manny Make It? This has nothing to do with Boston (it's more of a world matter), but Manny's back in the bigs! He signed with the A's in February and will return to baseball after serving a 50-game suspension. Personally, I don't think he'll reappear. I'm sure there'll be some ludicrous story along the way that leads to his re-retirement. But for now: Manny's back in the bigs!

1 ONE CRAZY FOLLOW-UP

When I last wrote about Jeremy Lin, I was afraid he'd fade back into obscurity before the issue hit the streets. Instead, he's become an international star and twice graced the cover of Sports Illustrated. Lin's taking over the world, one horrendous pun at a time.

2 KNEES TO KNOW

PURE PEVERLY
The Bruins regular season ends on April 7, which should be just enough time for Rich Peverly to recover from his sprained MCL. The third liner hasn't made many headlines this season, but he's the B's second-leading assist man and has the kind of speed that drives the other team crazier than Brad Marchand after 10 shots of Jäger. They need him back.

BASS MAN
As constituted, the Celtics will have a tough time winning the title, but to have any shot they need a healthy Brandon Bass. His knee has kept him out for weeks, and his energy and consistency were sorely missed. (In addition to his one assist per game.)

4 HEARTLESS DEADLINE DEALS

Kevin Garnett and Avery Bradley to Atlanta for Josh Smith and Kirk Hinrich Atlanta gets Garnett's leadership and expiring contract, plus Bradley's potential. The Celtics pick up Hinrich and Smith, an All Star–caliber player and Rajon Rondo's high school roommate. What could go wrong? (Aside from Rondo and Smith driving Doc into early retirement.)

Rondo and Brandon Bass to New Jersey for Deron Williams The Nets won't have to worry about signing Williams, and they can build around the less-expensive Rondo—who scores high with Brooklyn hipsters. Meanwhile, the C's will have the money and (with another max-contract player) the foundation to make a serious run at DWill and his horrible Julius Caesar haircut.

Ray Allen and Greg Stiemsma to Chicago for Kyle Korver, Omer Asik and Brian Scalabrine OK, so this doesn't make much sense, but I figure if the Celtics can't win the title, they might as well make it harder on Miami. Also, I can't wait to see how the world's axis responds to a Stiemsma/Scalabrine swap.

Paul Pierce to Memphis for Rudy Gay The Grizzlies get experience, toughness and one of the game's clutch scorers. The Celtics get a 25-year-old freak of nature who can run the floor and score on anyone. Who says no? (Besides Pierce.)

3 DATES TO WATCH

3/4: Knicks vs. Celtics. Or as they're calling it in Serbia: Linsanity vs. Pavlovicity!

3/10: Happy 25th birthday to Tuukka Rask. He can finally rent a car, but he still isn't allowed to steal a Zamboni.

3/11: Welcome to Selection Sunday, the one day every year when Dick Vitale has no need for Viagra.

"I don't care if

Soroff On ARIE KOPELMAN

The ex–Chanel chairman talks about marketing, Drew Barrymore and what grandmothers want.

FORMER CHAIRMAN OF CHANEL and avid historic preservationist Arie Kopelman was born and raised in Boston. He began his business career with Proctor & Gamble in the company's brand management program and worked in the advertising business before joining Chanel in 1986. He was named vice-chairman in 2004. He's a member of the board of managers of the East Side Settlement House, and for 16 years chaired the Winter Antiques Show, one of New York's premiere charitable events. He is a past president of the Nantucket Historical Association, and a board member of numerous other organizations. He and his wife, Coco, live in New York and Nantucket.

Jonathan Soroff: Coincidence that your wife is named Coco?
Arie Kopelman: It is. Her name is Corinne, but her parents always called her Coco.

How do you stay afloat as a luxury brand in this economy?
Chanel is sort of a three-legged stool: there's Europe, the U.S. and the Far East. The business in the Far East is booming. The U.S. is doing unusually well, and Europe continues to do well. The company's cooking along, and that's because the product is outstanding.

Is fashion mostly marketing?
No. I don't care if you're making laundry detergent or high fashion. It starts and ends with the product. I remember Bill Bernbach, who was the guru back in the day, always said, "Never forget: Good advertising makes a bad product fail faster." Because more people find out about it and find out it sucks. On the other hand, you can have a good product and it won't succeed unless it's well marketed, especially in a highly competitive field like fashion.

Three adjectives that describe Chanel?
First you'd have to say the word classic, because the brand is. But the magic of Karl Lagerfeld has been to keep it fresh, young and modern. So classic and modern, which are not contradictory, and I guess the third adjective would be hot. The brand has never been hotter.

What do you attribute that to?
It's one of the only fashion brands that appeals to three generations. Kids, teenagers and young women want it. Their moms want it. And their grandmothers want it.

Was it strange being a heterosexual male in the fashion business?
No, I never really gave it much thought or cared about anybody's sexuality. And there are plenty of straight men in fashion—arguably one of the dominant forces in the industry is Ralph Lauren, for example.

How do you take a design house that has fallen out of fashion and make it hot again?
Chanel was a prime example of that. The perception was that it was very ladylike and sort of matronly, and then Karl Lagerfeld came along and, together with a genius design team, turned that around.

Did your wife wear anything but Chanel?
Of course. But for a big occasion, she wore Chanel, which was a nice part of the job. I was always one of those husbands who liked helping my wife pick out a dress. I thought it was fun. And she certainly benefited from the fact that I didn't run a hardware company. "Look, honey! Here's a screwdriver!"

Did celebrities ask for free stuff?
We never did that. We would lend things, but we weren't one of those design houses that sent dresses for free to celebrities. As for my own involvement in that world, I did get to spend a lot of time with Nicole Kidman when she became the face for our fragrance ads.

What's the most unusual thing you've ever seen the company logo attached to?
I don't think there's anything particularly strange unless it's counterfeited. Every once in a while you'll see it on dog collars or something like that.

I once got onto a plane to West Africa with a woman wearing kente cloth covered in interlocking C's.
Exactly. But the counterfeit things can cheapen the brand, which is not in its best interest. I've never seen the logo legitimately on anything too outlandish. The snowboards, for instance, were runway props, not really for sale. They happened to be terrific products, because top manufacturers made them, but they weren't a business we planned to go into.

Your son Will is engaged to Drew Barrymore. Is that weird?
The only thing that can drive you a little nuts is if you go out to dinner and the paparazzi's waiting for you. But it comes with the territory, and Drew handles it beautifully and graciously.

You're known as a collector.
I always dreamed of owning a historic home, and we do. It's an 18th-century house on Nantucket, and it was a marvelous thing to restore. Of course, we wanted all the modern amenities, but using antiques gives it a sense of living with history. It wasn't so much a passion for collecting but to bring the house back to life faithfully.

What made you so passionate about historic preservation?
I went to Johns Hopkins as a pre-med student, but I ended up majoring in art history. I just love furniture and how people used these objects and the history of them.

What are your favorite house museums?
I'd say that Cogswell's Grant is one of my all-time favorites. Historic New England really does an amazing job.

Ever seen someone looking awful in Chanel?
I haven't. You could argue that someone might not look great in it if they were grossly overweight or something, because these are all designed in a way that flatters a more petite figure. But some people just look better than others in clothing.

Has the perception changed that Chanel is a uniform for a certain type of woman?
Yes, because there used to be what was called head-to-toe dressing, and that becomes too much in my judgment. I think a pair of jeans with a Chanel jacket or mixing and matching is much more interesting, and you see much more of that these days. ×××

BODY OF WORK

THERE ARE NO FLASHY costumes or pyrotechnics at Circa's Circa, a minimalist piece designed to showcase the expressiveness of the human body. Set to a jazzy instrumental soundtrack, the show features an ensemble of Australians performing a mix of acrobatics, modern dance, "aerial silk work" and contortionism. What Circa lacks in props, it makes up for in kink—leotard-clad ladies don high heels for sensual pas de deux while their shirtless partners play submissive. The highly-charged show tumbles into the Paramount Center on Feb. 29. TAMARA OMAZIC

Albert Nobbs ★ ½ Glenn Close first played tranny butler Albert Nobbs some 30 years ago onstage, and during her career-long battle to bring George Moore's short story to the screen, she somehow forgot to resize her performance for the cameras. Decked out in a suit borrowed from Charlie Chaplin, Close stars in this vanity project as a woman posing as a man so she can find work in a Dublin hotel. It's a hideous turn, plastered with prosthetic makeup and overcommitted gestures that are supposed to signal repression. (I considered moving my seat a few rows back, just to get some distance from the performance.) There's much ado about a woman's role in the workplace and some proto-feminist claptrap that must've seemed revelatory a few decades ago. As it stands, this is the least fun episode of Bosom Buddies ever. (At the Somerville Theatre and West Newton Cinema.)

Contraband ★★ ½ Not half-bad for a rainy afternoon time-killer. The Artist Formerly Known as Marky Mark is a former drug smuggler, reluctantly lured back into the life by double-barreled threats from Giovanni Ribisi and Ben Foster. Just one of those scenery-chewing bit players would have sufficed, so watching them work together feels redundant. Lucky for us, J.K. Simmons arrives to carve up even more ham. Directed by Baltasar Kormákur, Contraband looks fast and cheap, a low-rent quality befitting its grimy New Orleans shipyard setting. Poor Kate Beckinsale is stuck with a bottle-job hairdo, feigning lower-class status while Wahlberg takes command of the picture. He's grown into a reliable B-movie player, carrying scenes purely on authenticity and belligerence. This will never be confused with high art, and there's not a twist you can't see coming a mile away. But as far as throwaway January genre pictures go, you can do a lot worse. (In the suburbs.)

The Descendants ★★★ Despite never quite buying him as a cuckold, I enjoyed George Clooney's rumpled everyman turn in Alexander Payne's latest feature, adapted from Kaui Hart Hemmings' 2007 novel. When his cheating wife is critically injured in a boating accident during the opening credits, Clooney needs to step up and take charge of his family for the first time. The Descendants' plotless middle hour is particularly fantastic. Shailene Woodley's coltish awkwardness plays to the hesitation present in Clooney's relationship with his teen daughters, and Payne has a knack for letting scenes breathe and allowing his characters to surprise us. The central action in this very funny and often quite sad movie is Clooney stepping back and reevaluating everything and everybody he once took for granted. It feels like a transitional film for Payne, who has lost his young-man pitilessness and here reaches for a more accepting tone. It grows on you. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

Extremely Loud and Incredibly Close ★ Gross is the only word I'd use to describe director Stephen Daldry's adaptation of Jonathan Safran Foer's widely lambasted 2005 best seller. He's a wretched filmmaker who receives Academy Award nominations on a semiannual basis for transforming well-regarded books like The Hours and The Reader into star-studded features that nobody would ever sit through a second time. Foer's literary conceit is that 9/11 turned us all into a nation of lost children, and so it goes that we must follow Oskar, a boy who lands somewhere on the Asperger's spectrum and lost his father on that miserable September morning. Suffering from a movie-cute aversion to public transportation and hyper-edited panic attacks, Oskar isn't a character so much as an assemblage of quirks, a precocious proto-hipster who'll presumably be writing for McSweeney's before his 13th birthday. It's not actor Thomas Horn's fault that this is one of the most obnoxious characters with whom I've ever been trapped in a dark room. He was obviously directed that way. (In the suburbs.)

The Grey ★★★ ½ Arriving right on time for your midwinter fix of Liam Neeson badassery is director Joe Carnahan's survivalist nightmare. There are two surprises here. The first: Neeson isn't running around exotic locales knocking teeth out of Eurotrash baddies. This time he's fighting wolves. The second: This is a damn good movie. When his plane crashes en route to Anchorage, Neeson leads a motley band of oil company workers on a trek through inhospitable terrain. These men aren't suffering from the illusion that their employer cares enough to come looking for them, and the dwindling supplies and weather should be more than enough to do our boys in, provided they can keep from killing each other first. Oh, and don't forget the wolves. The Grey is a no-frills tale of Man vs. the Elements, and it'd all be unthinkable without Neeson, who's at the center of almost every frame, magnetic in his gravitas and grace. Then he curses out God and fistfights a wild animal. This movie is awesome. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Haywire ★★★ Bored genius Steven Soderbergh sets his sights on the direct-to-video martial-arts market with this oddity, a trashy thriller photographed like an art film. Retired MMA superstar Gina Carano stars as Mallory Kane, a private black-ops contractor betrayed by her lover/employer (an unctuous Ewan McGregor) and left to fend for herself in a collection of dustups and beat-downs. All but helpless when it comes to line readings, Carano is a force of nature whenever her physicality does the talking. Coasting on David Holmes' jazzy score and the grace of his star, Soderbergh slyly makes light of a hacky screenplay by his Limey scribe Lem Dobbs, pacing through formula beats from angles you've never seen. The fights are extraordinary—always shot in long, steady takes accentuating Carano's superhuman physical conditioning. The overqualified supporting cast includes Michael Fassbender, Antonio Banderas and a deadpan Michael Douglas. This is slumming in style. (In the suburbs.)

Hugo ★★★★ Leave it to Martin Scorsese to direct a children's adventure about the importance of film preservation. Working from Brian Selznick's book, The Invention of Hugo Cabret, this miracle of a movie follows the title orphan (Asa Butterfield) as he hides out in a Parisian train station in the 1930s, winding the clocks and dodging a pratfall-riddled rent-a-cop (Sacha Baron Cohen). Meanwhile, a grumpy shopkeeper (Ben Kingsley) just might have a secret of his own. Hugo takes a sharp turn into a voluptuously helmed cinema history lesson that should be taught in schools. Scorsese employs cutting-edge digital 3-D technologies for this love letter to forgotten films, embracing the exploratory spirit of the medium's original pioneers. Hugo reminded me why I fell in love with movies in the first place. (At Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

The Iron Lady ★ Of course Meryl Streep nails the accent and manages an eerie impression of Margaret Thatcher, it's what she does—she's Meryl fing Streep! But would it kill the greatest actress of her generation to turn up in a movie worthy of her talent? Like a companion to J. Edgar, The Iron Lady wastes a shocking amount of screen-time on a dementia-addled Thatcher doddering around her house, boozing it up in bad old-age makeup while carrying on conversations with her husband's ghost. The past 40-odd years of British history are reduced to a you-go-girl montage, complete with makeovers and sassy music cues that feel wrong juxtaposed against I.R.A. bombings. This is a shallow film that only exists as a grab for an Oscar nomination. Because Streep doesn't have enough of those already. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

My Week With Marilyn ★★ Simon Curtis' adaptation of Colin Clark's suspect memoir is a great big slab of fan-fiction—a film that follows the template of 2008's Me and Orson Welles as a banal wish-fulfillment fantasy for movie buffs. Charmless Eddie Redmayne plays Clark, an idealist with silver-screen dreams, working a thankless job on Sir Laurence Olivier's The Prince and the Showgirl. Olivier, played with what looks like a prosthetic chin by Kenneth Branagh, cast American bombshell Marilyn Monroe as his costar, assuming he'd get to sleep with her. Michelle Williams, an actress apparently incapable of giving a bad performance, is the picture's lone saving grace. The Monroe va-va-voom is very clearly just another one of Norma Jean's costume changes, and the real pleasure of Williams' work is watching her flip her sex-kitten routine on and off like a light switch. One can't help wondering what a serious movie about Marilyn Monroe might've been like with the fearless Williams in the role, but this is little more than the masturbatory fancies of Redmayne's nonentity. (At the Waltham Embassy.)

Project X ★ ½ Shouldn't the found-footage/fake-documentary fad be over by now? Or is it just easier for lazy filmmakers who don't bother planning shots to make a movie on shaky equipment? Whatever the case, this Cloverfield of teenage sex comedies doubles down on the stale wild party clichés and tries passing them off as something new thanks to an overdose of amateur Flip cam footage. Three high-school nerds decide to throw a rager and, as tends to happen when parents are out of town, the guest list quickly blossoms out of control. So we've got one boozy, sex-seeking night spent with a mousy kid and his short sidekick, along with a mystical geek rounding out the trio. Sound familiar yet? Project X shamelessly rips so many pages from the script of Superbad that Seth Rogen and Evan Goldberg have grounds for a lawsuit. At the very least, costar Oliver Cooper should consider sending Jonah Hill a letter of apology. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Rampart ★★ He's always been a brilliant comedian, but something more sinister is lurking behind Woody Harrelson's eyes. Rampart is a terrible movie that only works on the rare occasions when his searing performance is allowed to shine. Harrelson stars as Dave "Date Rape" Brown, a bullheaded cop caught in the late 1990s Rampart division scandal that rocked L.A. Starved down to sinew and raw attitude, Dave seems to subsist on cigarettes, martinis and xenophobic bluster. The running joke in the movie is that he doesn't even eat. Director Oren Moverman gums up every interaction with art school flourishes. Entire dialogue sequences are conducted with our only vantage point being behind a character's head, and crucial moments are so over-conceptualized that the camera often glides upwards, mid-sentence, into so many distracting, unnatural angles that at times Rampart is almost unwatchable. It's a shame, because Harrelson is magnificent. Always teetering on the edge of violence, he's odious and magnetic. (At Kendall Square.)

Red Tails ★ ½ Wasting a vital chapter of American history on yet another demo reel for his special-effects department, George Lucas strands the tale of the Tuskegee Airmen in a digital wasteland. With deliberately retro, corny dialogue meant to replicate the flying ace movies of the 1940s, Red Tails fails because it looks like a video game. I've seen less CGI in Shrek movies. Shot digitally and almost entirely in front of green-screens, there's nary a real background—or for that matter, an honest-to-God plane—in any given scene. If it wasn't already hard to take Cuba Gooding Jr. seriously, try doing it when he's awkwardly futzing with a pipe while interacting with props that don't exist. Director Anthony Hemingway is credited onscreen, but Darth Lucas seems to be taking responsibility on the talk-show circuit. Whoever's really responsible, it's a marathon of PlayStation dogfights and hokey line readings. And it's a shame. (In the suburbs.)

This Means War ★ This is the most vile romantic comedy in years, and that's saying something considering the dregs of this genre. Populated by expensive gadgets and sociopaths, the film stars Reese Witherspoon as a grown woman who carries on like a teenage girl, especially when finding herself simultaneously courted by two bromantic CIA agents (Chris Pine and Tom Hardy). Instead of tracking down Til Schweiger's ideology-deficient terrorist, who's just arrived in L.A. seeking vengeance, these two closet cases use our nation's chilling surveillance techniques to spy on each other during dates, sabotaging Witherspoon's romantic advances. She's a horrible liar, and they're both wasting taxpayer dollars filming each other having sex. Occasionally the haggard Chelsea Handler stops the movie to give a lecture about how men's hands indicate penis size. I was rooting for the terrorist. (At Boston Common, Fenway and the suburbs.)

Tinker Tailor Soldier Spy ★★ Let the Right One In director Tomas Alfredson's stagnant adaptation of John le Carré's spy novel revels in the source material's status as the anti-Bond thriller. Set in a 1973 rife with bad sideburns and unflattering eyeglasses, it's espionage full of ugly men toting manila folders and making insinuations in rooms so smoky that even the movie theater winds up with nicotine stains on its walls. Something very bad happened in Budapest, and Gary Oldman's George Smiley is eventually coaxed from retirement to ferret out a mole within the British secret service. Chockablock with great English character actors aching for a paycheck now that the Harry Potter series is over, Tinker Tailor fusses with a fractured time line, obscuring crucial information and priding itself on keeping the audience as far away from the plot as possible. This is an expertly mounted, enervating slog. (At Kendall Square, West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

The Vow ★★ ½ Surprisingly painless for this sort of soft-focus mush, The Vow benefits mainly from not being based on an awful Nicholas Sparks book. Rachel McAdams stars as a free spirit with fetching bangs and an adorable habit of rolling up the car windows whenever her husband farts. He's an affable hipster played by Channing Tatum. After a car accident, she suffers a crippling bout of amnesia that turns her into a shrewish Republican. Her estranged, hoity-toity parents (Sam Neill and a terrifying Jessica Lange) quickly jump back into the picture and the poor husband has to watch his hippie return to a foreign universe of fancy-schmancy dinner parties where nobody wants to talk about Elvis. It's gooey as all get out, but the leads are awfully appealing, and I enjoyed the unspoken message that the only way to really fit in with such awful people is by suffering a brain injury. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

W.E. ★★ By virtue of her pop-icon status, everything Madonna does automatically becomes a semiotics exercise, and so we're left to ponder her sophomore directorial effort—a heartfelt, personal and self-indulgent vision issued from within an ivory tower. Abbie Cornish, last seen in Sucker Punch, occupies the picture's main time-line as a Manhattan trophy wife ignored by her boozy husband (Richard Coyle) and obsessed with the historical travails of her namesake, Wallis Simpson. W.E. kicks into some serious double time-line storytelling, envisioning the abdication of King Edward VIII as a succession of glamorous parties with a miserable ending that I presume is supposed to mirror our central character's divorce. Shooting through hallways and doorways for the most part, the movie is awash in opulence and constricted by frames within the frame. But Madonna can never quite get to the bottom of this crazy, stupid love between a couple of Nazi sympathizers that knocked Great Britain's power structure for a loop. It's just a material, a material world. (At Boston Common and West Newton Cinema.)

Music Edited by Lindsey Canant

Giant Leaps

Playing Chicken Young the Giant mixes frontman Sameer Gadhia's vocals over upbeat rhythms and clean guitar sprawls to create a bright signature sound. Friends since high school, the members of this indie-rock sensation gained fame from a performance at the MTV Video Music Awards, a fall tour with Incubus and a Glee cover of their single "Cough Syrup." Now the Southern California–based quintet hits the national tour circuit with their self-titled debut. Watch the band go big on March 8 at House of Blues. Bobby McGee

BACH
ST. MATTHEW PASSION

Harry Christophers, conductor
Period Instrument Orchestra and Chorus

Given its first complete performance in this country by H&H in 1879, the St. Matthew Passion is considered by many to be one of the greatest masterpieces of all time. Bach's brilliant oratorio is a moving, glorious setting of the Gospel of St. Matthew.

LUNCH DATE

Bippity, Boppity, Boo

Leave it to the Ladies Who Lunch to throw a legit and delicious noontime shindig. Celebrating Self-Sufficiency, the sixth annual luncheon to benefit Dress for Success, took place at the Fairmont Copley Plaza. Though a high-octane estrogen-fest, there were a handful of Y chromosomes in the room, and the heterosexuals among them must've been like the proverbial pigs in you-know-what.

The city's most accomplished and powerful women, beautifully dressed and overwhelmingly attractive, made up the guest list, which included cofounders Enith Levine and Nancy Schneider, shaker and mover Jacqui Budd and her handsome other half, Wayne, banking babes Joanne Jaxtimer and Rosalin Acosta, who cochaired with healthcare executrix Lois Cornell, emcee and TV stunner Shayna Seymour, and every other woman with juice in this town. It was nice to see that most of them eschewed the predictable bouclé suits for something a little more soigné.

"I love a lunch that begins with wine," said one woman, to which her tablemate responded, "At my house, that's every day." There was a rationale behind plying people with alcohol, a third attendee pointed out: "The auction. Wine loosens the purse strings." It worked like a charm, although it was interesting to note that a week at a house on Martha's Vineyard went for more than a trip to the Caribbean, but tickets to a Red Sox game with a night at the Fairmont Copley Plaza beat both.

The crystal high-heel awards that have become a tradition at the event added a soupçon of Cinderella, and the only negative comment overheard was a complaint about the nametags: "I spent an hour picking out this outfit, and now I have to ruin it with a 'Hello, My Name Is' sticker?"

When Mom's Away, the Cats Will Play

A Beacon Hill drawing room filled with boho artists, intellectuals, art collectors and socialites sounds like something out of a Henry James novel, but it was the scene recently, when Miguel de Braganca Jr. and his father (whose wife, Suki was in L.A.) opened up their home on Mount Vernon Street. The incomparable Olivia Ives-Flores helped coordinate the evening, which was a preview party for the exhibit of five local female artists under the age of 30 now up in the Fenway gallery Yes.Oui.Si.

Shayna Seymour at the Dress for Success luncheon

Kristen Daly and Bridget Blythe at the Dress for Success luncheon

Ciara Hunt Francis and Stephanie Terelak at the Yes. Oui. Si. party

Olivia Ives-Flores, Mary Ellen Strom, Judith Larsen and Julie Graham at the Yes.Oui.Si. party

Tom Menino with his granddaughters, Taylor and Samantha, at the APR benefit Present and accounted for: the five artists in question—Stephanie Terelak, Alexa Guariglia, Lena Gustafson, Kira Leigh and Jordan Piantedosi—who glad-handed the likes of gallery owner Arthur Dion, artist and socialite Anne Fitzpatrick Cucchiaro, babe-a-licious blonde Jess Meyer and her other half, Tim Pappas, impish impresario Devin Hill, ivory-tickling academic Cameron Stowe of NEC and Juilliard, and equally eclectic others, the best illustration of which was that at one point, über-junior socialite Ashley Bernon was standing face-to-face with social activist Alex Pearlman. All the while, a killer jazz combo was sawing away in the living room, the wine flowed freely if you knew where to find the corkscrew and, for an evening, Beacon Hill felt like the coolest possible place to be.

Dec. 31 Is for Amateurs

Boston's bigshots ushered in the Year of the Dragon with a traditional Chinese banquet, held at the Chinatown gem Hei La Moon, to benefit the Academy of the Pacific Rim charter school.

Every table had its own center of gravity, from Hizonnah Tom Menino and two of his granddaughters, Samantha and Taylor, who attend the school, ex-Senate president Billy Bulger, Wheelock grand poobah Jackie Jenkins Scott, prominent do-gooders Micho and Bill Spring, South End power couple Edward Garmey and Sophia Carroll, force of nature Sukari Neblett, and students from the school's partner in China—Beijing Number 80. In addition to tying on the feedbag, guests got to enjoy a traditional fan dance followed by a hip-hop performance, and best of all, as one attendee put it, "They got us out of here in time to go home for a nightcap."

The evening's most amusing remark: Billy Bulger told the crowd that he had 33 grandchildren, which prompted one woman to say, "I always suspected the Bulgers were Mormon." ×××

The IMPROPER

A Question of Character

Years ago, a couple of friends and I spent a week prowling around northern England in a rented Vauxhall Nova. Our itinerary was hardcore medievalist porn: the tomb of St. Cuthbert, York Minster, the monastery at Lindisfarne and, of course, Stamford Bridge, where the Viking Age formally ended when somebody shot King Harald Hardrada in the throat with an arrow. (A thousand years later, nerds would use this as an excuse to go picnicking.) Yorkshire not being well-supplied with sleazy motels, we overnighted in bed-and-breakfasts. These were invariably run by puffy, tea-steeped widows with a penchant for macramé and chitchat. And so, amid the doilies, the cat dander and the wafts of fried egg, I discovered that I'm not a bed-and-breakfast person.

Adam DeTour

Everyone's either a hotel person or a bed-and-breakfast person. Just like all men must choose between boxers and briefs, it's one of those dualisms that defines a personality. Ah, you say. How can the fathomless complexity of a human being—how noble in reason, how infinite in faculties—be distilled to such a dumb generalization? To that I reply: Ginger or Mary Ann?

Point is, I wish I lived in a hotel. The anonymity, the infinite supply of shampoo, the lack of tchotchkes—if heavens' mansions don't come with overnight shoe shine service, God needs a better housekeeping staff. In this issue, then, we salute the hotels that give us shelter.

Fortune Favors the Bold

THE GRASS IS ALWAYS GREENER

IN THE 1950s, Kirsten Greenidge's grandmother went house hunting. She scouted the suburbs with a blonde-haired, blue-eyed acquaintance; neither one mentioning to the realtor which party was doing the purchasing. Decades later, the Arlington playwright returns to her family's old neighborhood with the debut of The Luck of the Irish, at the Boston Center for the Arts on March 30. The drama tells the story of an African-American family that pays an Irish family to act as their stand-ins when buying a house in an affluent neighborhood, and what happens 50 years later when the proxies' relatives demand the house back. "These are two groups really wanting a foothold in this area, and it affects how they treat each other," says Greenidge. "At the heart of it is whether these families could ever be friends. NICK ALTSCHULLER

Beauty

Nature and Nurture

An all-organic skincare line brings global beauty know-how to Brookline.

For two decades now, Lavinia Borcau has been one of those cult-of-personality aestheticians that draws loyal clients like a honey-scented moisturizer does bees. The Bucharest native is now doling out just that kind of sweetly scented product—all her own creation, all organic and all on the shelves at her Brookline spa.

LaVie Organique took her seven years and countless trips abroad to develop (she researched everywhere from labs in Paris to Romania to India), mixing new technology with Old World skincare diligence. There's a white-willow-bark–fueled cleanser (which doubles as a daily peel), a toner heavy on hyaluronic acid, and a mask full of quince and Hungarian chili peppers, with ground walnuts for extra exfoliation. There are also velvety eye creams and candles potent enough to perfume your entire home with just a few minutes' burn. (The tangerine, vanilla and bergamot version is sublime.)

The line includes ingredients that Borcau buys directly from certified growers and is manufactured in the U.S.A., while her products sport a luxurious-but-streamlined quality, down to the simple packaging. "I spent years making sure the products have everything in them that skin needs, but nothing it doesn't," she says. "I want people to be able to take care of their skin as well at home as they can in the spa." ALEXANDRA HALL

NORTHEAST STYLE MUSTARD GREENS $7, small; $10, large
One of the Kind Hong Kong Supermarket, 1095 Comm. Ave., Boston (617-254-5111)

Good Eats

Sole Food

The name does the stall no justice, but you'll be hard-pressed to find this dish anywhere else. At One of the Kind, the latest addition to the Hong Kong Supermarket food court, this Shandong-style preparation combines springy cellophane noodles, mustard greens and slivers of pork and scallions with lots of vinegar, which gives the stir-fry a complex, pickle-like tang typical of the culinary traditions of northeast China.

WILL POWER

Gilson makes his move.

AFTER SPENDING THE better part of a year popping up in Truro or the Boston Center for Adult Education, Will Gilson is finally headed back to brick-and-mortar. If all goes according to plan, in mid-May the chef who put Garden at the Cellar on the map (before selling it to his sous chef, Brandon Arms) will open Bridgestreet in the Inman Square space that briefly hosted Bosphorous.

"It's a chance for me to hit the reset button," Gilson says, promising to stay true to the simple style he's known for. It's also a chance to feature an oyster and charcuterie bar in a casual spot Gilson envisions as a complement to the neighboring eateries. He's hired Chris Yorty, of Temple Bar and Craigie on Main, as general manager.

IF YOU'VE BEEN TO Rino's Place in East Boston, you've experienced the notorious wait. Hungry patrons can finally find some relief from loitering on Saratoga Street with Prima e Dopo ("Before and After"), a 36-seat bar ready to whet appetites with grilled pizzas, chicken wings and bruschetta. Manager Joseph Camiolo says the menu is designed to accommodate the Rino's overflow, but locals have taken notice. Says Camiolo, "We've only been open for three weeks, and I've had people come back, three, four, five times." The menu also features a rotating roster of desserts, including a decadent espresso crème brûlée.

AFTER TAKING AN ETERNITY to open, Floating Rock has closed its doors in Cambridge after less than a year.... The Oak Room in the Fairmont Copley Plaza has shuttered for what's being called a "reimagining" as part of the hotel's centennial $20-million-dollar revamp and will reopen sometime in June.... After finding success last year at Tico, chef Michael Schlow will expand his empire into the Fenway with Happy's Bar and Kitchen. Aiming to open for all three meals in April, expect a gourmand's take on the classic New York–style deli, with oversized sandwiches, burgers and Jewish favorites.

RAISING SHELL

When restaurateur Frank DePasquale's Mare Natural Coastal Italian started dishing up bowls of seafood-spiked pasta in 2005, the Richmond Street restaurant aimed to bring a touch of modern elegance to the North End's fields of checkered tablecloths. Diners swarmed. But in the past seven years, the locavore movement's push for sustainability has caused a sea change in the shellfish scene. To keep up with trends, DePasquale, manager Thomas Taylor and chef Greg Jordan indulged their bivalve-curiosity and reopened the 50-seat space as Mare Oyster Bar in mid-February.

Aesthetically, the changes to Mare are few—a small raw bar overflows with massive Alaskan king crab legs, black-tipped Jonah claws and a rotating selection of East Coast oysters. A cocktail bar replaces a row of banquettes, adding vibrancy to the simple dining room. Cocktails, like an Aperol Spritz or the Devil's Tongue (Moscato d'Asti, cayenne and vodka), are engineered to complement the brightly flavored dishes.

"WE'RE AN AMERICAN-STYLE RESTAURANT NOW."

Jordan's menu veers away from Italian standards like shrimp scampi in favor of sweet Peekytoe crabcakes, truffle-crusted tuna and a mammoth lobster roll that packs the meat of an entire crustacean into freshly baked brioche. But the North End influence remains in dishes like confit-tomato, octopus and potato salad, or seafood risotto. "Even though we're an American-style restaurant now, you couldn't take that away from the neighborhood," says Jordan.

Q&A

THE NEXT FRONTIER

Blogger-turned-Food Network star Ree Drummond will stop by the Coolidge Corner Theatre to discuss her new cookbook, The Pioneer Woman Cooks: Food From My Frontier, on March 15.

What's the secret to your blog's success?
I think what set mine apart at the beginning was the step-by-step pictorials. Instead of just posting a photo of a steak, I'll take it before, during and after.

How important is professional-quality photography?
If you look at some of my old recipes, I look back and think, "Oh, that's gross!" There's one for the Marlboro Man sandwich. The photo is so unappetizing. My photography has definitely grown. In the beginning, it was more about the detailed instructions, but I've done so much of it through the years that it's gotten better and better.

Did you always want a TV show?
I wouldn't say it was something I always wanted. Blogging is the perfect medium because I can do it from the ranch, and I don't have to get dressed or drive anywhere. I really wasn't sure about TV. Then they said they'd come to the ranch to film, and the reasons not to try it began diminishing. I certainly don't have it mastered, and I watch the shows through my fingers.

Was it easier to write your second cookbook than the first?
My first cookbook was a complete experiment. I had no idea what I was doing, so I stuck to the style and spirit of my blog because that's what I knew. It was a labor of love. With the second cookbook, I was really able to dig in because I had the perspective. I focused on the food.

Is there anything you're afraid to make?
I'm scared to cook anything with bananas because I hate bananas. Honestly, the category that's a chronic struggle for me is breads. True artisan loaves. If I could snap my fingers and have a skill instantly, I'd master breads.

How do you balance health with homestyle food?
I think of dinner-plate sizes. Dinner plates used to be seven- or eight-inches, and now you can get 11- or 12-inch plates. It's just about portion size. I'm not about to stop eating scrumptious things, I just need to make sure I don't eat three huge serving-spoons full. And if I get a little chubby, I cut back. I encourage my kids to snack on raw fruits or vegetables. We're not going to stop eating biscuits and gravy, but maybe try half a biscuit to start.

PALIN COMPARISON

COCKTAIL: The Bristol at Highland Kitchen.

PRICE: $10.

INGREDIENTS: Old Overholt Rye, yellow Chartreuse, St. Elizabeth Allspice Dram, Fee Brothers Aztec Chocolate Bitters.

BARTENDER: Will Quackenbush, formerly of the Blue Room and Central Kitchen.

HIS TAKE: "It's a contemplative cocktail. It's best enjoyed when you can sit and stay awhile."

STARTING POINT: The Alaska, a classic recipe featuring dry gin, yellow Chartreuse and orange bitters.

THE BRISTOL
Highland Kitchen, 150 Highland Ave., Somerville (617-625-1131) highlandkitchen.com

NAMESAKE: Bristol Palin.

BUT YOU COULD PRETEND IT'S NAMED AFTER: The Tennessee motor speedway, a city in southwest England, -Myers Squibb, the lounge at the Four Seasons.

OTHER HIGHLAND KITCHEN COCKTAILS WITH HOTEL CONNECTIONS: The Sheraton Commander, the Buckminster.

TASTING NOTES: Fresh orange oil and rye on the nose, light herbal notes and spice mid-palate, chocolate notes on the finish.

GPS: Due to its popularity, the Bristol might soon be located under the "Highland Classics" section of the menu alongside the Periodista and the Seelbach.

The sample was free, and it came with a warning. "You're going to be in trouble when you taste this," said the staffer handing over a piece of fresh-baked tahini bread. "You're going to want to come back every day." Thus begins addiction. Swirled with nutty sesame paste, the bread would be reason enough to return to the new Armenian Market and Bakery. But then you've got the other items—a whole case of baklava, shaved-to-order shawarma and lahmajun (or "Armenian pizza")—to guarantee regular visits.

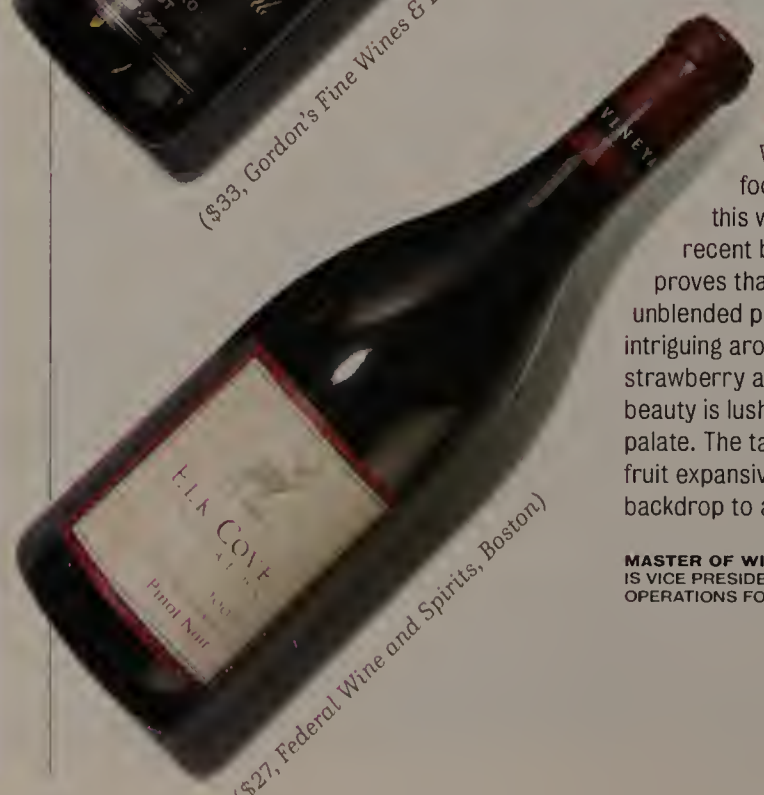
Wine

TO THE NINES

Oregon doesn't make a lot of wine but has a reputation for thrilling pinot noir. The 2009 vintage, however, was a letdown to collectors as it arrived on the heels of a fabulous 2008 and just prior to the anticipated glories of 2010. Yet the truth is always more complicated than any score chart. Many of the available estate-produced '09s are impeccably balanced, with silky textures and invigorating freshness. These three charmers are ready to enjoy now, while you wait for your 2008s to mature.

Noir house



($30, Marty's Fine Wines, Newton)

✳ Rex Hill Pinot Noir Willamette Valley, 2009 Featuring a delicate, floral fragrance, the current Rex Hill pinot is one of the best I've had in years. The flavors veer toward cherry pie, with notes of cinnamon, vanilla and baking spices. Smooth, mellow and relatively rich, this is a crowd-pleaser with a lingering, savory finish. Enjoy it with a wide range of seafood and poultry dishes.

($33, Gordon's Fine Wines & Liquors, Waltham)

✳ Bethel Heights "Estate" Pinot Noir Eola-Amity Hills, 2009 This small winery has been a favorite source of pinot noir (and chardonnay) for years. This vintage is particularly well structured, with bright, wild-berry-like acidity, fine-grained tannins and a deep mineral earthiness. A bit sturdier than the other picks, this wine originates in a zone with shallow volcanic soil that helps it express the edgy side of pinot noir's personality. Pair this bottle with grilled salmon.

($27, Federal Wine and Spirits, Boston)

✳ Elk Cove Pinot Noir Willamette Valley, 2009 Don't be fooled by the light color, this was my favorite in a recent blind tasting, and it proves that top quality, unblended pinot isn't opaque. With intriguing aromas of sweet herbs, strawberry and white pepper, this beauty is lush and creamy on the palate. The tannins are low and the fruit expansive, making it a strong backdrop to assertive, spicy fare.

I HAVE DOUBTS

TO "DOUBTING DONNA" FROM THE FEB. 15 ISSUE: While I have never heard a driver call someone a bitch, I have seen them curse while people crossed the street with a walk sign. As a driver, I know how frustrating it is to wait at a red light, only to have pedestrians cross as soon as my light turns green. But they do have the right of way. The best solution is for all lights at an intersection to stay red while pedestrians cross in both directions. Several intersections are set up that way, like Longwood and Brookline avenues. Frustrated? Write the mayor.

Driven to change

To all the hot guys who work out in the morning at the Boston Sports Club on Boylston Street: Please do the women a favor and don't wear a ratty old T-shirt that doesn't do your nice body any justice. Why not put on a tight tank top that shows us what you've got? Does anyone else think we have the hottest trainers and guys at this gym?

Work me out

In response to "Makeovers Wanted" from the Feb. 15 issue: You took issue with the "poorly dressed men of this city." I was annoyed that someone in this expensive city would find it necessary to criticize someone else's wardrobe. Perhaps you can afford new clothes for every season, but many cannot, and trying to make them feel like lesser beings only makes you look petty. Boston is full of working-class people, and I hope even the rich and stylish would recognize that there are more vital things to spend money on than the latest fashion trend. Like a beautiful ring to celebrate the relationship of two hardworking people who'd love each other in rags or riches.

LABOR OF LOVE

It's bring your soul to work day in this spiritual exploration.

PUT ASIDE DEGREES, CVs and time sheets for a moment. Thomas Moore, a former member of a Catholic lay order who became a therapist, takes your day job into the realm of the spiritual. He explores the notion that careers come more from the soul than from pragmatic actions, making an argument for the lusciousness of contemplation and for the usefulness of despair, suffering, failure and persistence.

Moore uses the imagery of alchemy, the pseudo-science in which base metals are cooked in the hope of transforming them into gold. He encourages people who have career success but flagging spirituality to "cook" their deeper feelings and values in order to discover their true, authentic vocation. This soul-searching involves exploring principles and beliefs, artistic leanings and family connections, but also includes coming to terms with repressed resentments and disappointments. Changing your life's work may bring turmoil and productive chaos. For example, Sting moved from working as a bus conductor to becoming the musician he is today. If you play life's piano by ear, the real, natural music of your vocation becomes clearer. ×××

A Life at Work
by Thomas Moore

Moore lives in Western Mass.

FROM PAGE 59: "After getting in touch with your soul, your essential vitality, and then considering your roots and your past experiences, you may be ready for the chaos. If you didn't have chaos in your life, you might be superficially happy with your job, but you wouldn't have the impetus to consider your deep desire for a life work. It might make all the difference to understand that chaos, though disturbing, is a positive thing."

BRAVE OLD WORLD

PRETTY VIEUX Old Quebec, looking past the Fairmont Château Frontenac to the river

WHEN A LOW-SLUNG winter moon hangs over the St. Lawrence River, the ice under the ramparts of the Citadelle of Quebec shimmers in orange filigree. Viewed through the windows of the dining room at the Fairmont Le Château Frontenac over a bowl of fricasséed escargots and honey mushrooms in garlic cream, it's a sight that's quintessential Quebec—Old French filtered through a frosted, North American prism. But while the city has long been a magnet for cultural and culinary tourists, what's often overlooked is that the colonial battlements enclose much to the modern taste. (Of course, escargots in garlic cream is an old-time dish that springs eternal.)

If you've never been to Quebec City before, it's essential to stay at Château Frontenac, the city's most recognizable landmark. Straddling the bluffs of the Cap Diamant on the site of the old governors' residence, the hotel's style is 19th-century grand railroad by way of the medieval Loire Valley, with a trailing detour into the baroque. Plaques in the courtyard name-drop Churchill and Roosevelt, while a 300-year-old stone Maltese cross overlooks the driveway. The lobby is worth a linger to study the ornate wooden paneling, ribboned with gold and motifs of fleur de lis. Heraldry is even etched into the elevator doors. Guest rooms aren't so concerned with tradition—they're luxury business in the standard stamp of dark woods, stuffed ottomans and Wi-Fi, although the views of the river and Citadelle are inimitable.

Dinner at the hotel's La Champlain restaurant is a lesson in Quebec's classic French roots. Silver plate, embroidered seats and columns crowned by coats of arms set an Old World mood, while dishes like doe chop and rabbit tournedos add a Canadian touch. Service, too, combines the grace and flair of Europe with a Canadian affability—it's formal without feeling stuffy. Most of the menu, though, arrives straight from the mind of Escoffier: foie gras, braised sweetbreads and a spectacular veal fillet with morel cream. Cow sentimentalists take heed.

✓ Traveler's Checks

If you visit in winter, pay heed to the "Attention: Chute de Glace" signs under the eaves of Old Quebec's charming stone buildings. They're not kidding.

Quebecois microbreweries are, on the whole, masterful. One local standout is La Barberié, a workers' co-op on Rue Saint-Roch.

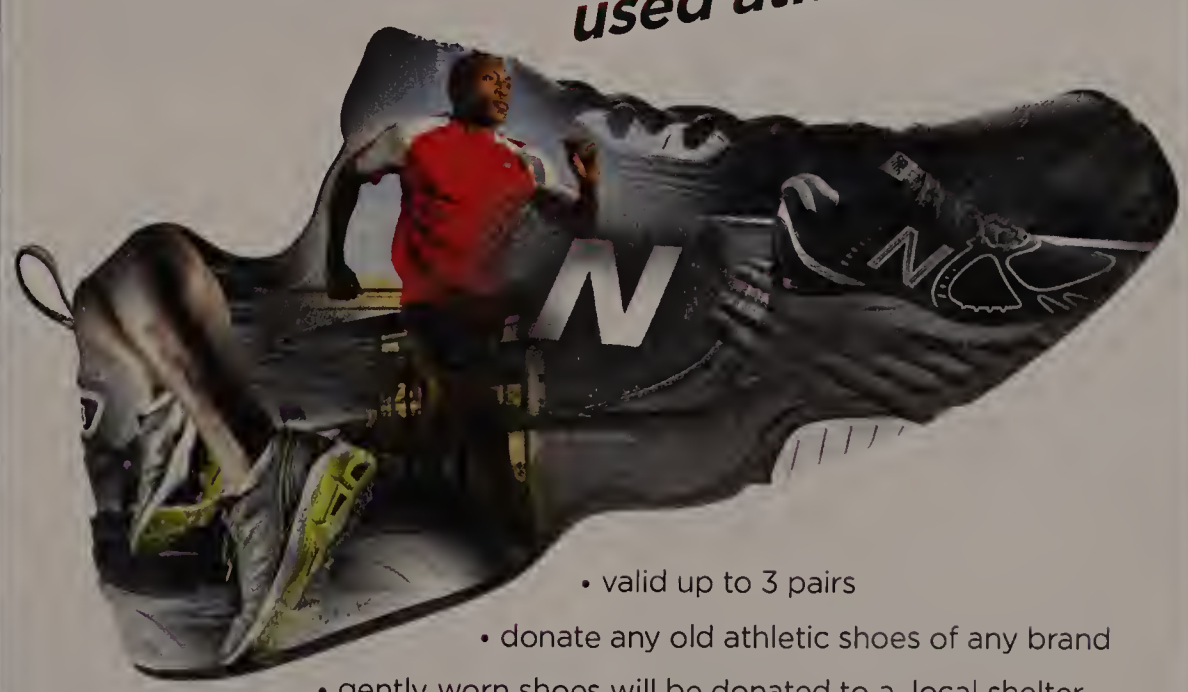
For a crash introduction to the current state of Quebecois cuisine, walk across the windswept Place d'Armes, down the long wooden L'Escalier du Casse-Cou ("Breakneck Stairs"; it's not ironic) to the Côte de la Montagne. If you're in the market for a novelty T-shirt, detour into the excruciatingly pretty Rue du Petit Champlain (Quebec's oldest street), but otherwise resist the call of the postcard and take a left onto Rue du Sault-au-Matelot. The stone storefronts house boutiques, furriers and chic, modern bistros. Take a left on Saint-Paul, past more cafes and antique shops, until you reach the Old Port Market. This drab waterfront sprawl encloses scores of stalls hawking local produce, fresh meat and charcuterie, wine and cider, and anything that's no more processed than a duck terrine. It's impossible not to graze and spend. If you don't leave with a cargo of sheep's milk cheeses and chocolate croissants, you're as unyielding as—and have tastebuds of—granite.

New Quebec is on full display in the neighborhood of Saint-Roch, a revitalized stretch of town to the northwest of the fortifications. Blending high tech, academics and a soupçon of urban grit under the shadow of the biggest church in the city, Tryp Quebec Hotel Pur hosts power suits who take a light lunch at its restaurant, called simply Table. In this fiercely minimalist space, featuring bare woods and hanging bulbs evocative of an upscale yoga studio, chef François Privé concocts a menu of Asian- and American-inflected tapas: scallops with tobiko, truffled mac 'n' cheese, mushroom pie.



To really get a taste of Quebec at its most authentic, though, take a stroll west along the commercial Rue Saint-Jean. Numberless Italian, Asian and Quebecois restaurants unroll past the gusting buses in the Place d'Youville, but one of the most compelling is Le Hobbit, a well-lit, friendly bistro. The exposed brick, trim black bar and jazz soundtrack belie a menu that mixes traditional soufflé and duck confit with unorthodox plats du jour like homemade tagliatelle with smoked emu and halibut flakes. Rinse it down with an imperial pint of MacAuslan's Griffon Red Ale, and you'll understand why this is a little jewel in a city with a glittering culinary scene. ×××

CHOICE CUT

The city's newest steakhouse meets every expectation.

Smith & Wollensky
294 Congress St., Boston
(617-778-2200)
smithandwollensky.com

CORNER THE MARKET PEI mussels are a worthwhile order at the waterfront steakhouse.

YOU DON'T GO TO A steakhouse for cutting edge cuisine. No matter which one you choose, there will be a slab of beef on your plate, a serrated knife in your hand and a glass of something overpriced at your side. It's in the preparation, atmosphere and service that a steakhouse makes its mark, and at its new Waterfront venue, Smith & Wollensky isn't always successful in separating itself from the herd.

The handsome restaurant encases a warm, comfortable environment with a large dining room divided into a number of distinct areas—from the tables looking out on the Fort Point Channel, to the private dining room, to the large oval bar serving a suit-and-tie crowd. The professional, efficient waitstaff project a hospitable demeanor and keep an attentive eye on your experience, be it the quality of your steak or the fullness of your water glass.

The list of starters included smoked-clam chowder ($9) and "Wollensky's famous" split-pea soup ($7). The former displayed the right consistency, thick but not floury, but the clam flavor could've been more pronounced. The pea soup's density, on the other hand, meant a bowl was too filling as an appetizer, but the concentrated ham flavor and buttery richness made it difficult to put down the spoon. From the salads, the Caesar ($10) wins over the Wollensky ($11). Both boasted excellent dressings. The Caesar's was mustardy, garlicky and cheesy (with the anchovies on the side). The Wollensky's vinaigrette tasted more delicate, but large cubes of browned potato "croutons" proved obtrusive and incongruous. A spicy beef, pepper and onion flatbread ($12) disappointed, its thick crust neither crispy nor chewy; its topping, though flavorful, felt desperately dry.

Delicious Prince Edward Island mussels ($15) banished all memory of the flatbread. Almost three dozen fresh, meaty mollusks arrived in a large tureen filled with a broth punched up with flavors of lemon, garlic, celery and prosciutto. For a light supper at the bar, the mussels far outshone the perhaps more instinctual choice of the butcher burger ($16). Served on a humongous carb-bomb of a roll, the meat was bland and not particularly juicy. Roasted chicken ($29) had excellent flavor but soggy skin, and while the breast was well prepared, the undercooked thigh and drumstick dragged down the effort.

But what about the steaks? A 14-ounce filet mignon ($41) was superb. Ordered simply charbroiled and medium rare, it was a superlative piece of beef, flawless in texture, at once resilient and fork tender. A bowl of exquisite, lemony Béarnaise redolent of tarragon supplied the perfect accompaniment.

A colleague ordered the 12-ounce dry-aged sirloin ($38), and I couldn't help but detect a hint of envy in his eye as he glanced at my filet. While the sirloin tasted robustly beefy, the cut was too thin to preserve juiciness.

A side of creamed spinach for two ($10) tasted pleasantly bitter and herbaceous, proving a natural pairing. On the other hand, the side of roasted asparagus ($12) was expensive for a pile of disparately sized spears. Desserts ran from an ultra-sweet pecan pie ($9) to the terrific assemblage of shooters ($9), a six-pack of four-inch glass cylinders holding a variety of sorbets, with lemon and mango as the standouts. For beverages, draft beers and Avalon merlot by the glass ($10) offered greater value than wine by the bottle, with prices starting at $42 and traveling north from there.

Out on Atlantic Wharf, Smith & Wollensky offers everything business and convention crowds traditionally desire: opulence, comfort, big portions with big prices. And while Mr. Smith and Mr. Wollensky are hospitable hosts, the experience isn't distinct. You dine and enjoy, but you wonder what Mr. Morton or Del Frisco are cooking up down the street. ✖✖✖

Q: NOW THAT SPRING IS COMING AND I AM WEARING MORE SKIRTS, I AM BOTHERED BY VEINS AND BLOOD VESSELS ON MY LEGS. WHAT DO YOU RECOMMEND TO GET RID OF THEM?

A: THE BEST TREATMENT TO REDUCE or eliminate unsightly leg veins is sclerotherapy. This is a very popular procedure for eliminating small red or blue strand-like veins.

Sclerotherapy involves injecting the veins with a small amount of an FDA-approved solution using a very fine needle. The procedure causes the vein to collapse, sealing off the vessel to prevent further blood flow, and the vein then disappears from view. Blood circulation for the legs is carried out through healthy veins located deeper within the body.

Since the injection needle is so small, patients often feel little pain and do not need any anesthesia. The injection process typically is complete in just 15 to 30 minutes. A minor stinging or burning sensation is common during and right after the injections are made, but is short lived. After the treatment is finished, a bandage will be applied and we recommend the use of compression or support hose for at least a few days.

Movies { SEAN BURNS }

THE PARENT TRAP

Jennifer Westfeldt's flick gets stuck in rom-com clichés.

Friends With Kids ★★
Starring Jennifer Westfeldt, Adam Scott, Maya Rudolph, Jon Hamm, Kristen Wiig, Chris O'Dowd, Edward Burns and Megan Fox. Written and directed by Jennifer Westfeldt. At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.

JUST ONCE I'D LIKE TO SEE a movie in which a man and a woman can be platonic friends without hooking up. We've seen this rom-com scenario at least a billion times before, ever since When Harry Met Sally set the template for male-female friendships acting as mere obstacles on the road to wedded bliss. Friends With Kids, from Kissing Jessica Stein star and cowriter Jennifer Westfeldt, tries awfully hard to trumpet its bold irreverence, while at the same time settling for such boring plot mechanics and conventional Hollywood morality that it might as well star Katherine Heigl.

OK, so maybe it's not that bad. But Friends With Kids starts out with such promise it's hard not to be resentful. We begin with a gang of six attractive Manhattanites dining out at a trendy bistro. Jon Hamm and Kirsten Wiig (most of the supporting cast has been borrowed from Bridesmaids) can't keep their hands off each other, sneaking off for poorly concealed bathroom assignations. Adam Scott and writer/director/producer Jennifer Westfeldt are the kind of friends who finish each other's sentences and make bawdy jokes about terminal illness and their failed relationships. But all this changes when Maya Rudolph and Chris O'Dowd (again, Bridesmaids) announce that they're having a child.

> Much to the consternation of their married friends, these two pals seem to have it all, until the screenplay decides that they don't.

Smash cut to four years later, when nights out in the glamorous city have been replaced by rare and frustrating evenings spent inside remote Brooklyn family homes. There's a cacophony of crying children, and these once happy couples now spend most of their time in sweatpants screaming at each other. But Scott's randy womanizer and Westfeldt's lovelorn stereotype remain unattached, still living in the big city but wondering aloud what happened to their friends. They feel inadequate about bumping up against their mid-30s without ever having settled down.

There's a great movie to be made about this jarring juxtaposition, exploring the toll that having a family takes on friendships, with a consideration of how people inevitably drift apart after choosing different paths. Friends With Kids so dearly wants to be that movie, but Westfeldt has shackled herself to such a lame gimmick that there's scarcely room to breathe.

If you can believe this one, Scott and Westfeldt decide to have a baby together for reasons that only make sense according to a screenwriter's manual. The two circle their way around a great deal of tortured logic before eventually arriving at the absurd conclusion that they'll remain friends and split custody with no complications. They figure there's no point in subjecting themselves to the arguments and compromises of marriage when they can just jump ahead to the "friendly ex" stage of divorced life.

It goes swimmingly, for a little while. Aside from a sight gag about explosive diarrhea, the child doesn't seem to play much of a part in their lives. (I can't even remember the kid's name, and I saw the movie a couple of days ago.) Mostly it's a movie about Adam Scott and Jennifer Westfelt taking a torturously long time to finally figure out that they belong together.

He shacks up with a va-va-voom Broadway dancer played by Megan Fox. She spends time with charisma vacuum Edward Burns. Much to the consternation of their married friends, these two pals seem to have it all, until the screenplay decides that they don't.

What's infuriating is that there's never a shortage of fascinating activity going on in the background of Friends With Kids. Hamm and Wiig's relationship, once so lovestruck and giddy, calcifies into buried resentments and passive-aggressive drunken outbursts over the course of the picture. At the same time, Rudolph and O'Dowd bicker with profane brio before collapsing into one another's arms. It's the loveliest screen marriage I've seen this side of Friday Night Lights, the two accepting and needling each other's shortcomings with a strong baseline of care and support. I wish the movie had been about them.

Instead, we're stuck with one contrivance after another keeping Westfeldt and Scott from just getting together already. It doesn't help that they're both the most inexperienced and least interesting actors of the bunch. Scott has proved himself a brilliant comedian on Party Down and Parks and Recreation, but here his monotone deadpan just flattens out into monotony. I got tired of listening to him. Westfeldt seems to be starring simply because she wrote and directed the movie.

Maybe Heigl should've been cast? ✖✖✖

MATING CALL

Bowerbirds survive a tough migration to reach their folky bliss.

Bowerbirds
play at Paradise Rock Club on March 24.

BOWERBIRDS ARE AN Australian avian species known for building unusual twig-based structures for their courtship rituals. But for Phil Moore and Beth Tacular, members of the indie-folk duo Bowerbirds, building a cabin in the North Carolina woods contributed to the splintering of their relationship.

"We had made an unfinished world for ourselves that we were having to live in between tours," says Moore, who shared an Airstream trailer with Tacular before they reconstructed a tobacco barn they discovered for free on Craigslist. "A neighbor drove it to our land and dropped all the logs down, and we stacked them up like Lincoln Logs, basically."

It proved a difficult process to balance recording and touring while simultaneously trying to put the finishing touches on their rustic retreat. "It seemed like we never took a break for three years," Moore explains. "We kept finding these opening [tour] slots and kept taking them, not figuring out when to say no."

> We have that wanderlust in us, and touring really helps take care of that.

Something had to break, and it was their relationship—in the middle of a 2009 European tour. When they returned to North Carolina, Moore stayed in the country while Tacular moved to nearby Raleigh.

But eventually, the singers started dating again. After months apart, they settled into their mountain cabin with fresh perspectives and began hatching their third album, The Clearing.

"It was great to get back and recalibrate everything," Moore says while running errands in a nearby town. "For this album, we took plenty of time off and gave ourselves some space."

That care can be heard in Bowerbirds' pastoral ruminations on the environment and love. The album lives and breathes with metaphors for the living world and what the duo has been through, including Tacular's hospitalization for a mysterious illness.

"I just regain my legs and shore my love, out in the hallowed woods," Moore sings in "This Year," adding, "We need a deeper frost, me and my meadowlark, under the winter's fist.... Hold tight 'til spring."

"That's very much about all the stresses," he says. "The deeper frost is referring to actually hibernating as much as possible."

Rural settings are familiar for Moore, who worked on a farm in his native Iowa. He moved to South Carolina, where he tracked birds in the swamps, then to its neighboring state, where he launched Bowerbirds in 2006 with Tacular, a visual artist. She picked up the accordion to complement his acoustic guitar, and they found solitude for their pursuits in their undisturbed mountain abode.

"It wasn't even conscious, but it gives us the mental space to create," he says. "There are so many distractions in the city."

However, any idea that they live like hermits with their two dogs (one adopted after they hit it with their tour van) would be off the mark. Moore says they enjoy keeping up with friends, catching live music in Raleigh, and even dancing to dubstep. Then there's their active social lifestyle as a touring band.

"Beth and I have that wanderlust in us, and touring really helps take care of that, just being able to wake up in a new place every day and meeting new people on tour and seeing slightly different cultures," Moore says. "When we come home, it's the complete opposite—and wonderful to be with our pups out on our land and not really have any schedule."

The dogs will stay with Tacular's brother in Colorado while Bowerbirds hit the road for a month, including a date at the Paradise Rock Club on March 24. To match the textural icing of the new album, the duo will be assisted by Leah Gibson (cello, piano), Mark Paulson (violin, bass, guitar) and drummer Yan Westerlund.

"It'll be quite a bit more noise from us this time," Moore says. "But it's still going to focus a lot on the vocals." Noise is a relative term when you come from the land of Bowerbirds. ✖✖✖

CAMPAIGN 2016!

I'm over this election cycle. Let's look ahead.

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

AT THE MOMENT, MOST political pundits are engrossed in the Republican primary and its implications for the 2012 presidential election. Not me. As usual, I'm a step ahead of every other so-called expert, and I say 2012 is old news. The real action is 2016, when we could have a wide-open race for the ovalest office in all the land. Here's a look into the future of the eight candidates everyone will be talking about four years from now.

Hot Buttons

DEMOCRATS:

JOHN NELSON: A distant relative of country legend Willie, John Nelson is a charismatic city councilman from Boise, Idaho. What he lacks in experience he makes up for in rousing speeches that stir vague optimism. An early favorite, his approval ratings took a dive when it was revealed that he left his sick wife to move in with his mistress. Fortunately, his wife only had a cold. He got back together with her once his mistress got cancer.

JENNIFER COULOTTE: Has a head for numbers and can recite pi to the 200th decimal place, which she proved during a recent debate. Despite her flair for policy nuance, her rapport with the common voter is often lacking. "I populate my own spreadsheet data one column at a time, just like you," she told an audience trapped in a West Virginia mine. While it's still early to pick a running mate, rumors suggest that Coulotte could temper her technocrat ticket by adding firebrand prop-comic and workout enthusiast Carrot Top as a running mate.

DOUG VINCENT: This 1980s TV star made his first fortune selling locks of his hair to smitten fans in the Ukraine, where his show, Helicopter Pilot, MD was a smash hit. In 2002 he did jail time for tax evasion but has maintained his innocence and blamed the entire affair on his accountant, Wesley Snipes. Vincent is popular with his base, but party officials doubt his chances in a general election, where it's considered a liability that he lives on a collectivist commune in a supergay part of San Francisco.

FREDERICK STUDDLE: A moderate who's respected on both sides of the aisle, this principled five-term congressman hasn't run a single attack ad against his competitors. Unfortunately, a group calling itself the Christmas Campaign for Justice released an ad showing a Photoshopped Studdle spooning between Freddy Krueger and Satan while a narrator asked, "What's Fred Studdle got against Christmas? He's not saying. But in all his years in Congress, Right Said Fred hasn't once not voted against not outlawing Christmas. Nice try, Studdlemuffin." A poll confirmed that 65 percent of Iowa primary voters now think Studdle fought for the Viet Cong. But pundits aren't counting him out, especially if he can outmaneuver his rivals and form an alliance with the increasingly powerful Carrot Top.

REPUBLICANS:

BRENT SMOLLY IV: Known for pandering to crowds despite his tenuous knowledge of local issues, he told a group in New Hampshire that he'd fight for the expansion of commercial lobstering on the mud flats of Lake Winnipesaukee. The scion of a prominent Northeast family, Smolly is the candidate voters say they'd most like to hang out with and shoot the breeze over a nice vintage Cognac.

JEFFERS UNDERFLOOD: A libertarian favorite, he's a longtime proponent of the legalization of everything. "Keep your government hands off my murder weapon" is a popular Underflood campaign slogan. When he released his tax returns, they revealed that 90 percent of his income is in the form of barter. He owns extensive real estate holdings on the bottom of the ocean, which isn't a place that anyone wants to live—yet. Famed for his determination, he's spent the past several years campaigning in an Iowa corn maze.

JOE THE PLUMBER: After formally changing his last name to The Plumber, this icon of regular Americanism is beating a path to the White House armed with nothing but no-nonsense folk wisdom and a super PAC seeded with $90 million from a Hong Kong pesticide conglomerate. A champion of deregulation, Mr. The Plumber estimates that the U.S. economy would grow eight percent annually were it not for the crippling drag of plumbing codes.

THEODORE FINK: A wealthy businessman who founded the non-secular fast food chain Heavens to Hot Dogs, Fink casts himself as a political outsider who, according to his campaign, "Can't even find Washington, D.C., on a map. Seriously. He thinks it's maybe near Arkansas." Fink vows that if elected, he'll apply his business expertise to the business of running America, because "when it comes down to it, America is basically a giant hot dog stand. Sometimes you're in the mood for mustard, sometimes you want relish, and sometimes you could really go for a proxy war with Iran." Fink was the presumptive frontrunner for 53 minutes, the longest tenure of any candidate so far. ×××

WHAT SPRING MAY BRING

2 SPRING WISHES

WES FOR A WHILE So the Pats franchised Wes Welker, ensuring that No. 83 will be here next season. That's great! But now it's time for them to step up and do the right thing: Give Wes his money. Not just for this year but the next three. Welker deserves the cash, and Brady deserves Welker.

SECOND-ROUND REQUEST It's been five years since both the Bruins and Celtics failed to make it past the first round of the playoffs, and while I don't believe the streak is in jeopardy, let's just say it's a slight concern. Gentlemen, we need you this spring. Four months of only baseball is four months too many.

SMACK TALK Papi still has some pop.

5 SOX OVER/UNDERS

David Ortiz Home Runs Over/Under: 30
Big Papi's streaky, but he's still averaged a hair under 30 dongs a season (29.7) over the last three. Will he get back over the hump in 2012? Well, he won't have much protection, but I say he will. Then again, I'll say anything to avoid giving him another thing to complain about. (Ah, who am I kidding? That's coming either way.)
Pick: Over

Josh Beckett Wins Over/Under: 16.5
Beckett really wants us to know that baseball's not his first priority. I really want Beckett to know that nobody cares. Spend all the time you want with your family, Josh. Just stay in shape, resist the temptation to be a flaming a-hole, and we're cool. Not as cool as you, of course, but still cool.
Pick: Over

Daniel Bard Innings Pitched Over/Under: 150
Bard's never pitched more than 75 innings in a season, but with his recent move to the starting rotation, the Sox are expecting at least twice that. Can he do it? Yes. Do you want him to? Eh, with his history of unraveling down the stretch, I'm not sure, but as I always say: Anything's better than Lackey!
Pick: Over

Carl Crawford Batting Average Over/Under: .280
It's a sad day when we're wondering whether the $20-million-dollar man can hit .280 for the season. Even sadder when I don't think he'll do it. Why? Well, his wrist will be an issue. There's no natural spot in the batting order. Plus, he'll be 31 in August. Congrats, John Henry. You were right! Now please sell the team and move to Liverpool. Pick: Under

Andrew Bailey Saves: Over/Under: 30
Jonathan Papelbon saved at least 30 games in each of his six seasons as closer; Bailey has never saved more than 26. Will the East Coast upgrade do the trick? The real question is whether Bailey can stay healthy. But now that the Sox finally fired Conrad Murray as head physician, I'm guessing everyone will be better fit for the season. Pick: Over

1 ONE DEADLINE PREDICTION

I'm typing this a week before the NBA trade deadline, but regardless of what has or hasn't happened since, there are two things I know for sure:
1) The Celtics aren't contenders.
2) It's going to be One Crazy Summer (this time with less John Cusack).

3 HEARTFELT GOOD-BYES

Farewell to Knuckles He was never the best, and certainly not the most consistent, but from Clemens to Vaughn to Nomar to Pedro to Manny to Grebeck to Ortiz to Pedroia, Tim Wakefield was always there and always ready. Screw the Pirates, Wake's a lifetime member of the Sox, and that's how he'll be remembered.

Captain Overboard Jason Varitek's tenure as captain didn't end in the most glorious fashion, but that doesn't take away from how much he meant to the organization over the last 15 years. He retires as a .256 hitter but a .400 captain. So, how long before he takes over for Bobby V as manager? Two years? Three?

Out of Indy You can dislike Peyton Manning as a rival, but you have to respect him as a player, and you had to get a little emotional as he said good-bye to Indianapolis. Sigh. OK, Peyton. Time to sign with Miami and restart this rivalry.

4 DATES TO WATCH

3/15: The NBA trade deadline and the first (real) day of March Madness? Best Ides of March EVER.

3/17: Forget Southie. Everyone's invited to my place to celebrate the city's most storied St. Patrick's Day tradition: New England Revolution at Sporting KC.

3/19: The Bruins face off against Toronto for the sixth (!) and final time this season. Are there any boos left for Phil Kessel? Yes, many, many boos.

3/22: The Sweet 16 comes to Boston, and I hear that if we're really good, they might even stay for the Elite 8.

"Fashion happens in a context which is societal, historic, economic and political."

Soroff On TIM GUNN

The grand man of fashion talks well-dressed cities, fashion vs. style and J. Edgar Hoover.

STYLE GURU TIM GUNN, 58, was born and raised in Washington, D.C., and attended Corcoran College of Art and Design, earning a BFA in sculpture. He began working at the prestigious Parsons the New School for Design in 1982 and was chair of fashion design from 2000 to 2007. He's currently the chief creative officer for Liz Claiborne, Inc., but is better known as the cohost of the reality-TV show Project Runway, which led to a spin-off, Bravo's Tim Gunn's Guide to Style, and to several books, including Gunn's Golden Rules: Life's Little Lessons for Making It Work. His trademark line, "Make it work," has become a generational catchphrase. Gunn appears at the Burlington Mall for Lucky Brand on March 17. He lives in New York City.

Jonathan Soroff: What's the biggest mistake men make with respect to dressing?
Tim Gunn: They wear clothes that are too big. I see it all the time.

Biggest mistake women make?
It's the same foible with both genders. It's really about the fit of clothes. Men seldom err on the side of things being too tight, whereas women frequently do. And then there are a lot of women who don't know their size, and everything they wear is too big. I work with a lot of women, helping to improve their fashion. I'll pick items out that fit someone, as well as her lifestyle and her aesthetic, and without exception, she'll go into the dressing room and tell me it's too tight.

Who's your tailor?
I have a guy who's in London for six months and New York for six months, and he's very expensive, so I use him only as a last resort. Otherwise, I take things to my dry cleaner to be fitted.

Do you have things in your closet that you've had for, say, 20 years?
That's a good question. To be honest, no. If I wear something with some frequency, it's going to wear out eventually.

One thing you'd never be caught dead in?
[Laughs.] A pair of cargo pants.

What's the difference between style and fashion?
Style is what I attribute to the individual. And that penetrates every aspect of the individual's life—from the clothes they wear, to the way they live, to how they navigate the world. I believe behavior, manners and etiquette penetrate that. Fashion, I attribute to clothing. Fashion happens in a context which is societal, historic, economic and political. That's why fashion does change. Clothes don't need to change. I'll cite the L.L. Bean catalogue. I have the greatest respect for the company. I wear L.L. Bean items. But it doesn't change, and frankly the customer doesn't want it to.

Current trend you're most sick of?
I simply can't wrap my brain around why women think they can do this or should, and if anything, it's becoming more pervasive: the legging as pants. It used to be that you wore leggings with a tunic, so the top came halfway down your thigh. Now, women wear T-shirts and leggings. If you're in a yoga class, OK. But they're not. We see way more anatomy than we want to see.

Fill in the blank: _____ is the new black.
Purple.

Celebrity you'd most like to dress?
Meryl Streep, because I do think she can get it right, but… it's not that I want to dress her. I want to sit down and have a conversation with her, because she's constantly saying, "I'm not a fashion person. I don't care about clothes." And while I believe she's our greatest actress, I also believe she's our smartest, and I think she thinks, "I'm too smart for clothes." I want to say to her, "Meryl, it's about semiotics. The clothes we wear send a message about how the world perceives us." So you can't just shrug this off. Well, you can, but you have to accept responsibility for what you wear. The other person is Hillary Clinton.

How do you turn a moribund label around?
I don't know of an American success story when it comes to that, and I'll include Liz Claiborne. I'm not saying that the brand isn't a success. Financially, it is, and we've sold it to J.C. Penney now. But in terms of real fashion and style, where is it happening? How many times has Halston been relaunched? Look at the trouble that the Bill Blass label has had. It seems to be a real challenge here, whereas in Europe, it happens all the time. Look at Alexander McQueen. You might not know he's departed.

Your father worked for the FBI under J. Edgar Hoover. Ever wonder what he wore when he cross-dressed?
I have a funny story about that. I was a huge I Love Lucy fan, and my sister and I were visiting our dad in his office in the early '60s. He said, "Vivian Vance [who played Ethel] is with Mr. Hoover. Would you like to meet her?" I said, "Would I?!" So he took me into the office and I met her. I was thrilled, and years later, when the stories about the cross-dressing came out, I was at Thanksgiving dinner with my sister. I said, "Do you remember the time we met Vivian Vance in Mr. Hoover's office?" She said, "Yes! Of course!" I said, "Does it strike you as odd, on reflection, that Hoover wasn't there?" [Laughs.]

Ever seen Heidi Klum without makeup?
Heidi Klum and I have been in a dressing room together nude! [Laughs.] She told me I needed more muscle mass.

Is there a city you consider particularly well-dressed?
Every city has a kind of fashion vibe, and it's up to each of us as individuals to ascribe a level of quality to it. Boston does, L.A. does, Washington, D.C., Chicago. What I love about New York is that it's incredibly diverse. You can stand on a street corner and see 50 people, each of whom is branded in a different way. And in that sense, I put New York in an international category. And the city most like New York in that regard is London. I wouldn't put Paris, or Milan or Rome in that category. It's much more homogenous.

Has there ever been a time when you couldn't "make it work?"
Oh, sure. It happened to me recently. My personal motto is always take the high road, rise above it. However, there are times when the high road gets so high, you're dealing with a nosebleed. ×××

AT YOUR SERVICE

Zoo animals, on-demand helicopters, in-room dog parks... it's all in a day's work for a top hotel concierge. By Jonathan Soroff

REMEMBER THE BEGINNING of The Bullwinkle Show, when the cartoon moose says to the flying squirrel, "Hey, Rocky! Watch me pull a rabbit outta my hat!"

That's sort of what being a concierge at a top hotel is like, except you can't let anyone see you perform the magic trick. And, unlike Bullwinkle, you have to actually produce the rabbit.

Unsurprisingly, the clientele at the city's best hotels are a discerning, if not a demanding, bunch, sometimes persnickety and unreasonable. Because they can afford to stay in rooms that cost up to $8,000 a night, they tend to be the sort of people who are used to having others do things for them. They're also apt to live on Planet Rich Folk, where the air's a bit thinner and what might seem outrageous to the 99 percent is standard operating procedure. The concierge's job is to accommodate every whim. Picture Jeeves on steroids, or a hybrid of MacGyver, Aladdin's genie and the butler on Downton Abbey.

As our cover model, Vincent Lago, senior concierge at the Fairmont Copley Plaza puts it: "I like to make the impossible possible, whether it's floor seats to a Celtics/Lakers game or setting up a room for a guy who's going to propose to his girlfriend."

His matter-of-fact, "ain't nuthin' but a thing" attitude is characteristic of concierges. That's because, in addition to performing feats of legerdemain, part of the job is never letting guests know just how difficult they are.

And concierges deal with some real doozies.

Staffers at the Four Seasons Hotel Boston have done everything from flying to and from New York to retrieve a dress a woman wanted to wear to an event that evening, to putting eyedrops in a guest's eyes every day for the duration of the stay. Some of the requests are whimsical: the lodger who called down to announce that he absolutely, positively needed a gong in his room, or the time a staff member secured a singing blue Tooth Fairy to wish someone a "Happy Birthday." And there are those occasions when the hotel has no choice but to gently redirect the guest's desires, like the guy who requested archery equipment, so that he could practice on the hotel's roof. They found him the gear, along with a more appropriate place to play Robin Hood.

"Do you expect me to be stuck in traffic just because the President's in town?" one VIP demanded of the staff at the Mandarin Oriental, Boston.

So as not to incommode this gentleman, his private plane was met at Boston Logan International Airport by a helicopter, and he was transferred to a helipad where a house car was waiting to zip him to the hotel. Another regular is very specific about the size of her seedless green grapes, requiring the team to measure each individual grape to ensure that its diameter doesn't exceed one inch. Then there's the guest who demanded Evian to replace the tap water in the rainforest shower. There are the overindulgent parents, like the couple who wanted a playground with a sandbox to be constructed en suite, along with a schoolroom and visits from exotic animals from the Franklin Park Zoo for show-and-tell. Or the romantics, like the man who handed a fashion magazine picture to the staff and asked for them to reconstruct the precise outfit to give as a present to his female companion. There are the germophobes who'll only touch a fork once or take a single sip from a coffee cup before requiring replacements. Or the simply capricious, like the woman who had a concierge helicoptered to a sheep farm in New Jersey to pick up 20 containers of a specific kind of yogurt.

Some guests' chutzpah knows no bounds. For example, the woman who had a miniature dog park, complete with real grass, built in her room, and then complained when she noticed that the grass tickled the belly of her lapdog. A concierge promptly trimmed it. →

THE SUITE LIFE

STACKING UP SOME OF THE CITY'S MOST LUXURIOUS OVERNIGHT GETAWAYS.

A single night's stay in one of these opulent suites may run more than a European vacation. Here's what you get for your grand. By Tamara Omazic

PRESIDENTIAL SUITE AT THE FOUR SEASONS HOTEL BOSTON

A New England sensibility and a secluded balcony overlooking the Public Garden make the presidential suite at the Four Seasons a peaceful oasis above Boylston. But the real gem is the baby grand piano used by composers like John Williams—a brush of the keys may leave you starstruck. Notable musical guests have included Billy Joel, Elton John and the late Whitney Houston. SQUARE FOOTAGE: 2,590 LAYOUT: Master bed and bath, dining room with pantry, living room and foyer. SPECIAL PERKS: Private bar. RATE: $8,000

DYNASTY SUITE AT THE MANDARIN ORIENTAL, BOSTON

Since opening in Boston three years ago, the Mandarin Oriental has boasted the most tech-savvy luxury lodging, and also the largest. The premier suite features five closets, should you pack every one of your personal belongings. Chances are you won't need them, though—the Dynasty's state-of-the-art home entertainment system will keep you occupied. SQUARE FOOTAGE: 2,600 LAYOUT: Master bed and bath, open living and dining room, pantry, full study and guest bathroom. SPECIAL PERKS: Soundproof windows. RATE: $8,000

PRESIDENTIAL SUITE AT THE RITZ-CARLTON, BOSTON COMMON

Just the words Ritz-Carlton conjure images of luxury, and the presidential suite lives up to the hype. The floor-to-ceiling windows open up to a spectacular view of Boston Common, while a golden floor-mounted telescope lets you scour the skyline for details. Impressive modern art, featuring one-of-a-kind pieces by local artists, offsets the warm, neutral decor. SQUARE FOOTAGE: 1,680 LAYOUT: Master bed and bath, open living and dining room, pantry, foyer and guest bathroom. SPECIAL PERKS: Extensive DVD and book collections; access to the hotel's wine collection reserved for guests of this suite; Illy espresso machine. RATE: $6,000

TATA SUITE AT THE TAJ BOSTON

Named for Taj Hotels' founder, the Tata Suite is an Indian-accented setup with warm yellow wells, intricately patterned blue carpets and rich wood furniture. Updated in May 2011, the light, open space is designed for entertaining, with touches reminiscent of an old-school British mansion—there's even a butler to carry round the sherry. SQUARE FOOTAGE: 1,540 LAYOUT: Master bed and bath, open living and dining room, service kitchen and guest bathroom. SPECIAL PERKS: 24-hour butler service. RATE: $4,500

TAJ BOSTON, 15 ARLINGTON ST., BOSTON (617-536-5700) TAJHOTELS.COM/BOSTON

A good concierge even has the power to create the illusion that people are more thoughtful than they actually are. One of the concierges at the Ritz-Carlton, Boston Common says:

"A few weeks ago on a Friday, I had a 20-something gentleman arrive off the red-eye from Las Vegas. He was here to celebrate his girlfriend's birthday. She lives in Boston. After checking in, he came over to me and confessed that he had nothing planned. He said he wanted to buy her a white iPad, so I ran over to the Apple store and picked one up for him and gift-wrapped it. Then I ordered flowers to be delivered. He informed me that he wanted to have dinner at Morton's the Steakhouse, so I called over, and of course, they were fully booked. I pleaded with them, and they were able to open up a table. Next, I called our pastry department and had them put together a cake. They wrote 'Happy Birthday!' in chocolate on the plate. Finally, I had housekeeping do a rose petal turndown for when they returned from dinner. They were completely wowed."

One woman had a concierge helicoptered to a sheep farm in New Jersey to pick up 20 containers of a specific type of yogurt.

The Ritz-Carlton is the real baller's hotel in Boston, quite literally, as it hosts most of the NBA teams when they're in town. Watch a single episode of Basketball Wives, and you'll know the kinds of ridiculous things a spoiled pro athlete might demand, but celebrities and their peccadilloes are something most concierges decline to discuss.

Amy Finsilver is a former Four Seasons concierge who's now general manager at the haute boutique hotel XV Beacon. When asked about all the celebrities, royalty and other VIPs who've stayed there, her response is cryptic: "If these walls could talk…" Of course, they can't, and neither can the concierge. Discretion is paramount, no matter how many flaming hoops they have to jump through to get things done.

That's not to say there isn't an upside to the job. Plenty of these guests—who seem to have gone to the Michael Jackson School of Reality—are generous tippers. Moreover, regular contact with the top people at the best restaurants, clubs, hair salons, spas, shops and ticket agencies give concierges privileged access. And they meet interesting people: Lago has escorted Vanessa Williams to her room, arranged a 90-minute massage for Jessica Biel, chatted with Adam Sandler and saw President Obama en route to visit Caroline Kennedy.

"Every day's different, and there's never a dull moment," he says.

But what happens when a guest's request simply goes too far, and making the impossible possible is simply out of the question?

A 40-year veteran who worked at the old Ritz-Carlton and now works at the Taj recalls a regular guest who stayed at the hotel while driving his Ferrari from New York to Maine. This guy had a reputation for giving every girl he dated for any length of time a cushion-cut emerald engagement ring from Tiffany & Co., and one night when he was out on the town, he picked up a woman and brought her back to the hotel. He woke up in the morning, horrified to see the ring intended for his girlfriend on the finger of his one-night-stand. He called down to the concierge to ask for help in getting it off.

"I'm sorry, sir," he said. "That's something I can't help you with. But I suggest you do it as gently as possible." ✖✖✖

A Local's Guide to Boston Hotels

You don't need to book a room to take advantage of the luxuries at some of the city's top hotels.

THE ELIOT HOTEL

BEST REASON TO VISIT: Ken Oringer → Everyone knows that Clio and Uni are two of the city's top dining experiences. After their remodeling this year, they're buzzworthy again.
DON'T MISS: The Uni Spoon with quail egg, caviar and chives.

THE FAIRMONT COPLEY PLAZA

BEST REASON TO VISIT: The Oak Room → Plump down in an armchair with a carafe of martinis. You'll never feel more like Cary Grant.
DON'T MISS: The city's best cocktail nut mix and the big soft pretzels that come with a glass of beer.

XV BEACON

BEST REASON TO VISIT: Mooo → The bar hosts a thrumming after-work scene, while the leather-paneled dining room is an opulent backdrop for a big night.
DON'T MISS: American Wagyu beef dumplings.

FOUR SEASONS HOTEL BOSTON

BEST REASON TO VISIT: The Bristol Lounge → It's swank. It's pricey. Everyone's always going on about the burger. Truth is, the hype's deserved, and the bar menu's one of the tastiest in town.
DON'T MISS: The house dry-aged steak is arguably one of Boston's most overlooked indulgences.

INTERCONTINENTAL BOSTON

BEST REASON TO VISIT: Sushi-Teq; the Spa → Turns out, tequila works with everything, especially raw fish. And the spa is 6,600 square feet of tranquility overlooking the Greenway.
DON'T MISS: The 510 Roll with a glass of anejo; Le Peau au Miel body treatment, using honey from the rooftop beehives.
ADDITIONAL SERVICES: Walk-ins can drop $25 to use the pool and gym facilities.

THE LANGHAM, BOSTON

BEST REASON TO VISIT: Bond; Chuan Body + Soul spa
DON'T MISS: The big, brash cocktail menu (pair a drink with poutine with duck gravy); the traditional Chinese massage menu.
ADDITIONAL SERVICES: Walk-ins can use the pool and gym for $25.

THE LIBERTY HOTEL

BEST REASON TO VISIT: Scampo → Lydia Shire's Italian place won its laurels for its mozzarella bar and, of course, lobster pizza. Less well-known is the excellent gluten-free menu.
DON'T MISS: The housemade breads.

MANDARIN ORIENTAL, BOSTON

BEST REASON TO VISIT: The Spa → It deserves every one of its five stars for the quality of treatments, the expertise of its staff and the state-of-the-art "heat and water" facilities with vitality pools and "experience showers."
DON'T MISS: The "New England Retreat" treatment—designed for easing the modern strains of staring at screens and marathon texting sessions.
ADDITIONAL SERVICES: With a scheduled spa appointment, you get access to the hotel's health club.

NINE ZERO HOTEL

BEST REASON TO VISIT: K.O. Prime → Everybody's a master of charcuterie these days, but executive chef Josh Buehler also shows a deft hand with foie gras and sweetbreads.
DON'T MISS: The lively bar scene; creative steak accoutrements like corned-beef tongue hash and duck eggs.

THE RITZ-CARLTON, BOSTON COMMON

BEST REASON TO VISIT: Artisan Bistro → Chef Andew Yeo likes his products local and his oysters grilled. Order them, along with a bistro classic like croque-monsieur.
DON'T MISS: The Avery Bar mixes the best Vesper in the city.
ADDITIONAL SERVICES: Walk-ins can pay $25 for a day pass to Sports Club/LA, including its pool.

TAJ BOSTON

BEST REASON TO VISIT: The Bar → The fireplace and view of the Public Gardens make a decorous backdrop for drinking in the classic ambience. And the cocktails.
DON'T MISS: It's all about martinis.

W BOSTON

BEST REASON TO VISIT: Market by Jean-Georges; Bliss Spa → A minimalist setting for thoughtful dishes like short ribs with rosemary crumbs; an upbeat spa with a focus on facials.
DON'T MISS: Market's roasted cod; the spa's brownie buffet.
ADDITIONAL SERVICES: Star mixologist Charlotte Voisey helms the bar at Descent, the W's nightclub.

ASK THE CONCIERGE

BY VIRGINIA BILLY BARRY

We called six concierge desks and asked the same question: "What's the best place in town for seafood?" The answers were sometimes consistent, sometimes self-referential and occasionally surprising.

NINE ZERO HOTEL "Atlantic Fish, first and foremost. It's excellent. It's been around quite a while, and it's very exact to the New England style."

OMNI PARKER HOUSE This concierge boasts about Omni Parker's in-house establishment, Parker's Restaurent, saying, "The term scrod was invented right in our hotel, so you get wonderful seafood right at Parker's Restaurant." He also plugs Legal Sea Foods, which "is part of a chain, but they're still rated in the Zegat guide as some of the best seafood in Boston." He named Oceanaire Seafood Room, too.

COLONNADE HOTEL This concierge recommends his hotel's in-house eatery, saying of Brasserie Jo, "I love the scallops in angel hair pasta. It's simply delicious, and I think our clam chowder is outstanding." He also mentions the "many different Legal Sea Foods in the area, Atlantic Fish Company and Abe & Louie's." He adds, "I enjoy the hardwood tables at Skipjack's."

HOTEL COMMONWEALTH "As it happens, the best seafood restaurant in the whole of Boston is actually located in our own property. It's called Island Creek Oyster Bar." Pressed for other suggestions, he adds Neptune Oyster and the Daily Catch.

HOTEL MARLOWE "The place I normally go to is the Summer Shack. There's Legal Sea Foods, which is a chain around town, but one in particular that just opened recently on the waterfront in the Seaport District is Legal Harborside." He also cites Oleana, curiously. "It's kind of Mediterranean, really, really cool... a little bit difficult to get into."

LENOX HOTEL "My favorite is definitely Atlantic Fish, also B&G Oysters in the South End, Neptune Oyster—but it doesn't take reservations." Elaborating on Atlantic Fish, she adds, "They deliver their seafood fresh daily, any type of fish, different style preperations, the steff is attentive. The managers are lovely."

BOSTON HARBOR HOTEL "My personal favorite is Neptune Oyster. Mare Oyster Bar is also very good. Another one of my favorites is B&G Oysters. In particular, what I love about that restaurent is they heve e lobster BLT, and it is absolutely phenomenal."

Grand Opening

By Nancy Gaines

ANOTHER REVERE IS COMING. But the word this time is good tidings. A forthcoming hotel in the downtown corner that city fathers and some arts writers have hailed as the Theater District—really more of a Theater Intersection—marks a boost for a Boston area trying to live up to its name.

Undergoing a $27-million makeover by its new owners, the former Radisson Boston at 200 Stuart Street plans to open in mid-April—around the time of the Midnight Ride—as the Revere Hotel Boston Common, with its interior transformed into a 356-room boutique hotel featuring avant-garde function space, a theater and presentation space, a 6,700-square-foot events room, a lounge and a $4,000-per-night presidential suite. (It also houses the old Rustic Kitchen restaurant.)

The concept of the Revere is a mélange. Named for a famous silversmith and branding itself as a presence in the Theater District, its Emerald Lounge is a reference to the city's Emerald Necklace. And Oz. The bar area features art that evokes Dorothy's famous tornado. And staff uniforms—designed by MassArt students—are seemingly inspired by the Minutemen.

It goes without saying that the Revere has a sense of humor. "If people want to be snarky and say, 'Ooh, Revere... like in Beach?' that's OK," says the hotel's public relations director, Bryan Barbieri. "We're into knickerbockers and lanterns and all that, too."

The coming of this swank Revere, a few paces from self-described "colony of cool" the W, might mean less traffic for each, as they share a street in the somewhat depressed Boston hotel market. But it's smart strategy, say the experts.

Call it cluster luck. It's the same concept that generated a Restaurant Row, Lansdowne Street or Jewelry Building. "We have a fancy name for it: agglomeration," says Cathy Enz, professor of strategy at Cornell University School of Hotel Administration. Her recent study of 20,000 hotels showed "co-location" delivered a revenue boost to competing properties, especially mid-range to high-end accomodations located near higher-end businesses. She adds, "It's the spillover effect."

The facelift of the theater neighborhood was propelled in recent years by Emerson College, newly crowned by its Paramount Center. On the drawing board are the adjacent $172-million Kensington Place (at LaGrange and Washington streets, or what was once "hooker corner"), Millennium Partners' promise to fill the hole left by Filene's Basement, and hundreds of millions of dollars more of residential and commercial construction. The Revere arrives in the swaddling of a renaissance.

"Business begets business," says Charlie Perkins of Boston Restaurant Group, a guru of restaurant purchase, sale and siting. There's the adage that one steakhouse next door to another means two steakhouses doing well, and that applies to hotels. "Look at Copley Square," Perkins says, ticking off hotel names. "You have five major, upscale properties, and they all do well."

"You're seeing major investment, reinvestment and repositioning in the higher-end and luxury-type boutique properties," says Patrick Moscaritolo, president of the Greater Boston Convention & Visitors Bureau, "because the market is driven by high-end corporate business travelers. They're CEOs, CFOs of global companies: tech, biomedical, think tanks. And they want what they're used to in other world capitals."

Of course, admits Moscaritolo, the downside is that if the world economy goes into a tailspin, "we feel it more than other cities."

Boston's hotel occupancy rate last year was a good, but not stellar, 77.4 percent, up a scant point from 2010. The average room rate was $227, including tax. Average "luxury" rates were about $365. The Revere's will run about $265–$685.

Standing a mere block from the trendy W, the Revere isn't meant to replicate its hipness, says general manager Simon Mais. "We're more approachable," he notes. "We're definitely not here to be a lifestyle brand."

There's a young and lean look to the decor, with loft-like function spaces and luxe screening rooms for private use. "We wanted to appeal to the IT/architecture/design people, with more inspirational space," says Mais.

While the Radisson was a rather dreary property, built in 1971 as the 57 Park Plaza Howard Johnson, the past is important to the Revere: The number 57 theme continues in its "Space 57" function rooms. Referencing the past while delivering luxurious, modern services is how the hotel plans to make its mark.

As for referencing the North Shore, laughs Barbieri, "If you want to laugh, we're already in on the joke." ×××

PERSONAL GROWTH

"FIRST IMPRESSIONS" is the theme for this year's Boston Flower & Garden Show. Appropriate, considering the impact a blooming rosebush can have on the senses. Featuring colorful garden displays full of vibrant blossoms, the exhibitions are produced by leading local landscapers who'll help you get a leg up on outdoor styling. You can purchase everything from tools to plants to floral-themed gifts, while lectures and demos show how to turn your patch of dying grass into a personal Eden. Want to know the dollar value of "curb appeal," or how to use your backyard tomatoes to feed a garden party? Dig in from March 14–18 at the Seaport World Trade Center.

Don't Mis Out

Vive la Révolution!

Broadway junkies have long been obsessed with Les Misérables, but younger generations are more familiar with songs like "I Dreamed a Dream" because of Susan Boyle or Glee. To celebrate the 25th anniversary of what many consider to be the greatest musical ever, a revival has been making its way across the continents. Playing at the Boston Opera House through April 1, this may be your last chance to sing along to "One Day More" (before the big-screen adaptation hits theaters in December). Shelby Carignan

Albert Nobbs ★ ½ Glenn Close first played tranny butler Albert Nobbs some 30 years ago onstage, and during her career-long battle to bring George Moore's short story to the screen, she somehow forgot to resize her performance for the cameras. Decked out in a suit borrowed from Charlie Chaplin, Close stars in this vanity project as a woman posing as a man so she can find work in a Dublin hotel. It's a hideous turn, plastered with prosthetic makeup and overcommitted gestures that are supposed to signal repression. (I considered moving my seat a few rows back, just to get some distance from the performance.) There's much ado about a woman's role in the workplace and some proto-feminist claptrap that must've seemed revelatory a few decades ago. As it stands, this is the least fun episode of Bosom Buddies ever. (At West Newton Cinema.)

Being Flynn ★ ½ As the film is based on local author Nick Flynn's memoir Another Bullshit Night in Suck City, the title change alone shows how the story has been sanitized for mass audience approval. Adapted and directed by Paul Weitz, who made the promising About a Boy and has since devoted his career to backwash like Little Fockers and American Dreamz, Flynn stars wet noodle Paul Dano as a writer wrestling with substance abuse issues while trapped in the shadow of his alcoholic cab-driver dad (Robert De Niro). Any movie that puts De Niro behind the wheel of a taxi is asking for trouble, and as the actor delivers a rote collection of inconsistent behavioral tics, he fails to locate a character with any sense of tragic heft. Scrubbed clean of any regional color or naturalistic grit, the entire movie looks like it was shot on a Hollywood soundstage. I didn't buy it for a minute. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Casa de Mi Padre ★ ½ A five-minute Funny or Die sketch dragged out to feature length, Will Ferrell's latest bizarre project finds the comedian playing a lunkhead son of a Mexican rancher caught in the middle of a bordertown drug war. Borrowing the goofy conventions of '70s exploitation movies and telenovelas, the flick wallows in laughably phony background paintings, fake horses, overwrought music cues and deliberately bumpy camera movements. Shot entirely in Spanish, this science experiment costars Y Tu Mamá También sidekicks Gael García Bernal and Diego Luna as dueling drug kingpins, with Man on a Ledge scene-stealer Genesis Rodriguez as the woman making everybody crazy. I suppose director Matt Piedmont deserves credit for pulling off such an elaborate stunt, but exactly how long are we supposed to find it amusing? It doesn't have enough jokes to work as a parody, yet the movie is far too busy winking at the audience to become interesting on its own goofy terms. The whole thing just kind of sits there. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Golden Girls

Making Waves ArtsEmerson celebrates Women's History Month and the 40th anniversary of the nonprofit Women Make Movies with Joan Braderman's The Heretics, a documentary about the famed feminist art magazine Heresies. The film catches up with contributors like Lucy Lippard and Ida Applebroog, and encourages a dialogue about the current state of the movement. Braderman discusses her film and its impact after the screening on March 23. Ariel Spierer

The Descendants ★★★ Despite never quite buying him as a cuckold, I enjoyed George Clooney's rumpled everyman turn in Alexander Payne's latest feature, adapted from Kaui Hart Hemmings' 2007 novel. When his cheating wife is critically injured in a boating accident during the opening credits, Clooney needs to step up and take charge of his family for the first time. The Descendants' plotless middle hour is particularly fantastic. Shailene Woodley's coltish awkwardness plays to the hesitation present in Clooney's relationship with his teen daughters, and Payne has a knack for letting scenes breathe and allowing his characters to surprise us. The central action in this very funny and often quite sad movie is Clooney stepping back and reevaluating everything and everybody he once took for granted. It feels like a transitional film for Payne, who has lost his young-man pitilessness and here reaches for a more accepting tone. It grows on you. (At Kendall Square, West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

Ghost Rider: Spirit of Vengeance ★★ ½ A sequel nobody asked for to a movie nobody liked, Nicolas Cage's second go-round with the minor-league Marvel Comics character sounded promising when directors Mark Neveldine and Brian Taylor were brought on board. The ADD-addled pranksters behind Jason Statham's trashy Crank series do their best with a screenplay that borrows way too much from Terminator 2. Hilariously cheap looking, it's shot in run-down, foreign tax-break locations, and extras were obviously not in the budget. But if you're a fan of Cage's late-career schlock, you could do a lot worse. Nic bugs his eyes and flails his arms, throwing erratic line readings into the ether. Idris Elba has a grand old time as an alcoholic priest, and the motion-capture techniques used to transform Cage's face into a flaming skull are at least convincing—because who else moves like that? I wish it was even sillier, but I enjoyed the gonzo flourishes on this assembly-line product. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Hugo ★★★★ Leave it to Martin Scorsese to direct a children's adventure about the importance of film preservation. Working from Brian Selznick's book, The Invention of Hugo Cabret, this miracle of a movie follows the title orphan (Asa Butterfield) as he hides out in a Parisian train station in the 1930s, winding the clocks and dodging a pratfall-riddled rent-a-cop (Sacha Baron Cohen). Meanwhile, a grumpy shopkeeper (Ben Kingsley) just might have a secret of his own. Hugo takes a sharp turn into a voluptuously helmed cinema history lesson that should be taught in schools. Scorsese employs cutting-edge digital 3-D technologies for this love letter to forgotten films, embracing the exploratory spirit of the medium's original pioneers. Hugo reminded me why I fell in love with movies in the first place. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

The Iron Lady ★ Of course Meryl Streep nails the accent and manages an eerie impression of Margaret Thatcher, it's what she does—she's Meryl fing Streep! But would it kill the greatest actress of her generation to turn up in a movie worthy of her talent? Like a companion to J. Edgar, The Iron Lady wastes a shocking amount of screen-time on a dementia-addled Thatcher doddering around her house, boozing it up in bad old-age makeup while carrying on conversations with her husband's ghost. The past 40-odd years of British history are reduced to a you-go-girl montage, complete with makeovers and sassy music cues that feel wrong juxtaposed against I.R.A. bombings. This is a shallow film that only exists as a grab for an Oscar nomination. Because Streep doesn't have enough of those already. (In the suburbs.)

John Carter NOT REVIEWED I probably waste too much space in this magazine complaining about the day-to-day indignities that have become par for the course in what sounds like a cushy gig, but Disney finally crossed a line during last week's screening of John Carter. Invited guests were ordered to submit to TSA-style security checks, including physical searches and the confiscation of all bags, cell phones and laptop computers. I'm sorry, but frisking critics and demanding that they leave personal property worth thousands of dollars on top of a folding table in a crowded theater lobby—with no insurance beyond a smile and legally worthless assurances that all this expensive stuff will still be here when the movie's over—is, frankly, beyond the pale. A colleague and I immediately deemed this situation unacceptable and left without watching the film. (In response, a local studio representative called us "drunk and belligerent" on my Facebook wall, and then deleted her comment minutes later. Because we're adults.) I hope readers will understand why I had no choice but to let you down, and I promise that I'll be the first in line on opening day to buy a ticket and review John Carter under less invasive conditions. On the bright side, I'm told that Disney provided free cupcakes and fruit punch to those who stuck around for the screening. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

My Week With Marilyn ★★ Simon Curtis' adaptation of Colin Clark's suspect memoir is a great big slab of fan-fiction—a film that follows the template of 2008's Me and Orson Welles as a banal wish-fulfillment fantasy for movie buffs. Charmless Eddie Redmayne plays Clark, an idealist with silver-screen dreams, working a thankless job on Sir Laurence Olivier's The Prince and the Showgirl. Olivier, played with what looks like a prosthetic chin by Kenneth Branagh, cast American bombshell Marilyn Monroe as his costar, assuming he'd get to sleep with her. Michelle Williams, an actress apparently incapable of giving a bad performance, is the picture's lone saving grace. The Monroe va-va-voom is very clearly just another one of Norma Jean's costume changes, and the real pleasure of Williams' work is watching her flip her sex-kitten routine on and off like a light switch. One can't help wondering what a serious movie about Marilyn Monroe might've been like with the fearless Williams in the role, but this is little more than the masturbatory fancies of Redmayne's nonentity. (At the Waltham Embassy and in the suburbs.)

Project X ★ ½ Shouldn't the found-footage/fake-documentary fad be over by now? Or is it just easier for lazy filmmakers who don't bother planning shots to make a movie on shaky equipment? Whatever the case, this Cloverfield of teenage sex comedies doubles down on the stale wild party clichés and tries passing them off as something new thanks to an overdose of amateur Flip cam footage. Three high-school nerds decide to throw a rager and, as tends to happen when parents are out of town, the guest list quickly blossoms out of control. So we've got one boozy, sex-seeking night spent with a mousy kid and his short sidekick, along with a mystical geek rounding out the trio. Sound familiar yet? Project X shamelessly rips so many pages from the script of Superbad that Seth Rogen and Evan Goldberg have grounds for a lawsuit. At the very least, costar Oliver Cooper should consider sending Jonah Hill a letter of apology. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Red Tails ★ ½ Wasting a vital chapter of American history on yet another demo reel for his special-effects department, George Lucas strands the tale of the Tuskegee Airmen in a digital wasteland. With deliberately retro, corny dialogue meant to replicate the flying ace movies of the 1940s, Red Tails fails because it looks like a video game. I've seen less CGI in Shrek movies. Shot digitally and almost entirely in front of green-screens, there's nary a real background—or for that matter, an honest-to-God plane—in any given scene. If it wasn't already hard to take Cuba Gooding Jr. seriously, try doing it when he's awkwardly futzing with a pipe while interacting with props that don't exist. Director Anthony Hemingway is credited onscreen, but Darth Lucas seems to be taking responsibility on the talk-show circuit. Whoever's really responsible, it's a marathon of PlayStation dogfights and hokey line readings. And it's a shame. (In the suburbs.)

This Means War ★ This is the most vile romantic comedy in years, and that's saying something considering the dregs of this genre. Populated by expensive gadgets and sociopaths, the film stars Reese Witherspoon as a grown woman who carries on like a teenage girl, especially when finding herself simultaneously courted by two bro-mantic CIA agents (Chris Pine and Tom Hardy). Instead of tracking down Til Schweiger's ideology-deficient terrorist, who's just arrived in L.A. seeking vengeance, these two closet cases use our nation's chilling surveillance techniques to spy on each other during dates, sabotaging Witherspoon's romantic advances. She's a horrible liar, and they're both wasting taxpayer dollars filming each other having sex. Occasionally the haggard Chelsea Handler stops the movie to give a lecture about how men's hands indicate penis size. I was rooting for the terrorist. (At Boston Common, Fenway and the suburbs.)

Tinker Tailor Soldier Spy ★★ Let the Right One In director Tomas Alfredson's stagnant adaptation of John le Carré's spy novel revels in the source material's status as the anti-Bond thriller. Set in a 1973 rife with bad sideburns and unflattering eyeglasses, it's espionage full of ugly men toting manila folders and making insinuations in rooms so smoky that even the movie theater winds up with nicotine stains on its walls. Something very bad happened in Budapest, and Gary Oldman's George Smiley is eventually coaxed from retirement to ferret out a mole within the British secret service. Chockablock with great English character actors aching for a paycheck now that the Harry Potter series is over, Tinker Tailor fusses with a fractured time line, obscuring crucial information and priding itself on keeping the audience as far away from the plot as possible. This is an expertly mounted, enervating slog. (At Kendall Square, West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

from not being based on an awful Nicholas Sparks book. Rachel McAdams stars as a free spirit with fetching bangs and an adorable habit of rolling up the car windows whenever her husband farts. He's an affable hipster played by Channing Tatum. After a car accident, she suffers a crippling bout of amnesia that turns her into a shrewish Republican. Her estranged, hoity-toity parents (Sam Neill and a terrifying Jessica Lange) quickly jump back into the picture and the poor husband has to watch his hippie return to a foreign universe of fancy-schmancy dinner parties where nobody wants to talk about Elvis. It's gooey as all get out, but the leads are awfully appealing, and I enjoyed the unspoken message that the only way to really fit in with such awful people is by suffering a brain injury. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Wanderlust ★★ ½ Paul Rudd gives better reaction shots than any other performer working today, and the first 30 minutes of director David Wain's hippie satire allow him to shine as a disgruntled cubicle drone initially taken with a commune (they call it "an intentional community") on the outskirts of Georgia. Coiled aggression lurks beneath Rudd's unassuming nice-guy screen presence, and Wain orchestrated it into a symphony of glorious misanthropy in his 2008 Role Models. But Wanderlust lacks a structure worthy of its star. After a killer setup, the movie seems to drift away as you're watching it, squandering some hilarious work from Alan Alda as the acid-addled elder statesman and a surprisingly not-awful performance from Jennifer Aniston. Wanderlust is bogged down with aimless improvisations, which strands a talented cast within overlong scenes of repeated jokes and goofy faces. Justin Theroux's studly egomaniac guru is emblematic of the picture, initially hilarious and ultimately wearying. With a little discipline, this could've been a contender. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

We Need to Talk About Kevin ★★★★ Recalling the parental fearfulness of Eraserhead, director Lynne Ramsay's third feature is an outrageous provocation. Brutal, hilarious and incredibly sad, its viewers are either going to love it or despise it. Either way, here's a movie worth arguing about. Tilda Swinton, that art-house icon with the sharp angles and Ziggy Stardust aura, stars as a mom whose accidental pregnancy crushed her globe-trotting dreams, so her child turns into a psychopathic stand-in for her guilt-ridden selfishness and regret. Dizzily skipping back and forth over two decades, Ramsay composes images in fragmented waves, as stray bits of scenes accumulate over time. Something very bad has happened, but it's going to take us a little while to find out exactly what. Seamus McGarvey's gorgeous cinematography amplifies the sterility of a suburban landscape that's punctuated by blindingly bright reds. Everything from tomato soup cans, to clock radios, to jelly sandwiches act as harbingers of doom. This is bravura filmmaking. We're not supposed to talk about a lot of the ugly feelings Kevin stirs up, but maybe we should. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Music Edited by Lindsey Canant

It's All Relative

Kin Folk Though the name might conjure a plump old lady, Aunt Martha comprises Tim Noyes, Brian Kim and Garrett Leahy, often joined by bassist Grant Zubritsky. With soulful strings, doleful drums and inspired lyrics, Martha's down-South-folk-meets-Damien-Rice tunes might put a lump in your throat. Fresh from a trip to Austin's SXSW, the local outfit returns to their old stomping grounds, playing upstairs at the Middle East on March 24. Kiley Jacques
